MUSIC

Edited by Alexandra Cavallo

BASS LINES When Meghan Trainor hit the airwaves two years ago she dropped the bass—and some knowledge—on the pop music scene. Her body-positive anthem, "All About the Bass," with its retro doo-wop stylings, put the bluesy-piped singer on the map and earned her a Grammy nom. But the Nantucket native is no one-hit wonder. Trainor backs up that booty and that swagger on her recently dropped sophomore effort, Thank You, whose fieree new single, the catchy pieee of pop candy "Me Too," finds Trainor opining "If I was you I'd wanna be me too." And with her 2016 Grammy win for Best New Artist, she ain't kidding. Get a little Meghan training in self-confidenee when she hits the Blue Hills Bank Pavilion on Sept. 24 and 25. / Alexandra Cavallo PHOTO: FRANK MADDOCKS

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Sarah Hagman

FIRST LADY When Charlotte Brooks first picked up a camera for LOOK, the former aspiring social worker was photographing supermarket cheese displays for the advertising department. But before long, her assignments involved much bigger cheeses—she tagged along on the campaign trail with Eisenhower and Nixon—and Brooks began capturing history while making history herself as the magazine's only female staff photographer. For the first retrospective of the pioneer's career, the Davis Museum at Wellesley College digs into photos Brooks took for LOOK between 1951 and 1971, including this portrait of salsa sensation La Lupe, snapped after the singer's exile from Cuba, and a photo essay that caught up with Brown v. Board of Education plaintiff Minnijean Brown after her relocation from Arkansas to a private integrated high school in New York. Take a look through Brooks' eyes at the Davis from Sept. 28 to Dec. 18. / Sarah Hagman

ROSÉ FOR DAYS

Nantucket got a major infusion of Parisian chic when Chanel teamed up with the formidable Kay and Ashley Bernon to throw a fundraiser for Berkshire Hills Music Academy, which provides musical and life skills training to young adults with intellectual disabilities.

The cocktail party took place on the lawn of the Bernons' stunning home overlooking Galley Beach, on what would have been Coco Chanel's 133rd birthday. The free-flowing cocktails and baubles from Chanel's fine jewelry collection made for a dangerous combo; as one guest put it, "What could go wrong when you put a cocktail in my hand and show me a diamond necklace?"

Among the soigné throng: the hostesses' husbands, Peter and Paul, the school's executive director, Michelle Theroux, Argentinean beauty Daniela Corte and her husband, Stuart Roseman, cupcake mogul Courtney Forrester and the dashing Michael, Chestnut Hillion Debbie Lewis, blond beauty Simone Winston, automotive mogul George Albrecht, Thurston Howell III lookalike Bob Crowe and his gorgeous daughter, Caitlin, force of nature Laura Baldini, the sparkling Pramy Yadav, philanthropic babes Kat VanDernoot and Penny Fireman, unfairly attractive couple Ryan and Christina Pierce, the magnificent Margaret McNeill, fashion imp Suhail Kwatra, Our Lady of Boucle Mary Nobile-King, lovable rake Michael Tilley and one man wearing bright-green go-to-hell pants, who joked, "I thought I was coming to the American Ireland Fund party."

"I just came from the Vineyard," observed another guest, "and the Obamas didn't have as much security as these jewels."

After perusing (and in some cases, purchasing) the baubles, guests were invited inside for a performance by two of the school's amazingly talented students, and then everyone headed over to the Galley for a toes-in-the-sand dinner.

The evening's funniest exchange: "So far, we are on our eighth case of Whispering Angel this summer."

"You guys are amateurs."

IT'S A NEW ENGLAND VARIETAL...

It was a critical mass of media babes at M.J. O'Connor's when Bombshells Against Breast Cancer took over the outdoor patio for a pretty-in-pink cocktail party to raise money for The Ellie Fund.

Front and center: radio babes Kennedy Elsey, Danielle Murr, Jen Royle and Kendra Petrone, powerhouse publicists Kimberley Ring Allen and Nicole Russo, human nuclear reactor Janet Wu, fashionistas Cheryl Fenton, Jessica Hennessy and Kimberly Gioioso, tech exec Martin Clinton, social media mogul Joselin Mane, the gorgeous Gail Hoffman Fine, beautiful blond jewelry designer April Soderstrom with her handsome other half, Ben Rawitz, hot tamale Nelly Carreno and several people who wandered over from the Harley-Davidson convention next door.

"I hate saying 'sauvignon blanc,' because I sound like an idiot trying to pronounce it, so I usually just order a dry white wine from New Zealand and hope for the best."

"You're not wearing pink!" one guest scolded a friend, to which her friend replied, "I hate wearing pink. Shoes and lipstick are about as far as I'll go."

Meanwhile, the evening's best exchange: "I hate saying 'sauvignon blanc,' because I sound like an idiot trying to pronounce it, so I usually just order a dry white wine from New Zealand and hope for the best."

"Well," said the man she was talking to, "at least you're not one of those Bostonians who ask for a glass of 'shad nay.'" ◆

HOME COOKIN'

MY PATERNAL GRANDPARENTS grew up just miles apart in Donegal, a green speck on a craggy coast with more sheep than people and a name that means "Fort of the Foreigners." But they didn't meet in Ireland. As the story goes, they met in Boston at Castle Island on maids' day off, the Thursday respite for domestic workers. Irish immigrants would evidently gather in groups according to their native counties, staking out a couple of patches of green with a view of the water. Sully's didn't exist yet, so I imagine they brought along food—something that's always brought people together.

So maybe that's one reason I dig Mat Schaffer's feature for this issue, which profiles eight local chefs and restaurateurs bringing cuisine from their native countries to Boston, from Nepali momos to Uruguayan chivitos. Elsewhere, the staff rounds up some of the tastiest fried chicken on menus right now, including a special sandwich that's only on offer one day a month. MC Slim JB tucks into tinned fish at a new wine bar, and Matt Martinelli gets a first taste of a forthcoming destination for surf and turf. Meanwhile, Ezra Dyer mans the grill (hilarity and singed eyebrows ensue). And Jonathan Soroff interviews restaurateur extraordinaire Garrett Harker, who chews the fat about his latest project and finding pearls in oysters. Oh, and speaking of, Sarah Hagman shucks up our Style page with edgy pearl bling that's far from grandmotherly. Bon appétit.

POWER PACKING

A LOCAL STARTUP SETS OUT TO RETOOL SCHOOL LUNCH

Lunch Launch

"I've always made my kids' lunches. I made my kids' baby food," says Lexington's Lisa Farrell. "I didn't do all the mommy things; that was the thing that I did." Now she's packing school lunches for lots of other kids as the founder of Red Apple Lunch, a service that aims to make brown-bagging easier on busy parents with online ordering and home delivery for up to four nights a week. Farrell—who spent a corporate career working for companies like Odwalla—piloted the concept in Cambridge and Arlington last spring. Starting Oct. 1, she's slated to expand to Boston and eight other surrounding towns, delivering lunches made with locally sourced and organic ingredients at Malden's Stock Pot Kitchen. "We're not trying to get too exotic. We're trying to just have really good ingredients and simple, balanced menus," says Farrell, who's using Iggy's bread and Cabot cheddar in her turkey sandwiches. Such mains are served with a choice of fruit and veggie—say, an apple from Apex Orchards and carrots from Drumlin Farm—plus a small treat, like choco-craisin mix or a chocolate chip bite. Even sweeter: Red Apple Lunch has partnered with Malden's Bread of Life to donate a healthy snack to a homeless child for every lunch sold. / Jacqueline Houton

UPGRADE
KITCHEN TESTED

Produce so locally grown, it's harvested from your own kitchen—that's the promise of SproutsIO, a new app-controlled, soil-free indoor growing system that only requires watering about once a month. The idea germinated at the MIT Media Lab, but founder Jennifer Broutin Farah field-tested the device in Barbara Lynch's kitchens at No. 9 Park and Menton. "A lot of the things we grew with them were our first time growing it," Farah says. "Everything they wanted was micro—micro cherbil, micro cress, micro carrots. There was a great need for the chefs as a lot of local farmers don't want to grow smaller, more delicate produce, because by the time it gets to the restaurants it's damaged."

What's more, the chefs were able to tailor the produce to their palates, as in the case of Menton saucier Brian Krieger, who dialed up the flavor of peppercress to top Menton's tortellini en brodo. "The first time we grew it, it was peppery, but not peppery enough," Farah says. "By the third time, we had changed the lighting, adjusted the nutrients, and then it really got to that peppery flavor." Only a few toques were officially tapped to test out SproutsIO—currently priced at $599 in a Kickstarter campaign that continues through Oct. 19—but Krieger was far from the only fan in the kitchen. "Brian gave us a call and was like, 'Produce is missing!' " Farah recalls with a laugh. The device's camera, used to monitor plant growth, also captured the culprits in action. "Brian has tattoos all up his arms, and the hands coming in didn't have tattoos on them. So he asked, and some of the other chefs from [Lynch's neighboring spots] Sportello and Drink said, 'Yeah, we started borrowing it for some of our dishes,' " Farah explains. "At first, they were like, 'What is going on? What is this?' And then by the end of it we had the chefs stealing from one another. That was something we were really proud of." / J.H.

MANNING THE FORT: Justin Shoults, Nancy Batista-Caswell and Brian Mercury have ... Oak + Rowan

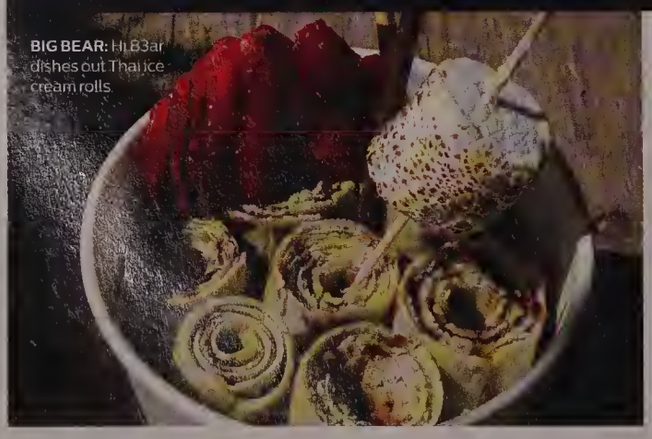
MIGHTY OAK

A NORTH SHORE RESTAURATEUR SETS UP SHOP IN FORT POINT.

Oak + Rowan
319 A St., Boston
ookandrowan.com

Nancy Batista-Caswell knows she's a rare bird. At a time when many successful city chefs are opening spots in the 'burbs, she's bucking the trend. The restaurateur behind Newburyport's Brine and Ceia Kitchen + Bar is set to open Oak + Rowan in Fort Point at the end of October.



"I always wanted to be a part of Boston proper at some point, but I didn't think I'd ever have the success to do so," Batista-Caswell says. "I know it's another beast coming from the suburbs to the city, but there's also the challenge of the lack of population in the suburbs, and things like that where you have to work very aggressively on an everyday basis. If we can take what we've implemented there and do it here, I think we'll probably be successful."

Justin Shoults will leave his post as executive chef at Brine to oversee the kitchen at Oak + Rowan, focusing on a surf-and-turf concept. Starters include a halibut poke with egg yolk, turnip, shallots and white sturgeon caviar. "I want to eliminate the perception of caviar. I felt like it was age- and demographic-specific," Batista-Caswell says. Caviar offerings will range from an ounce down to a 4-gram tasting on a Portuguese muffin. House-made pastas such as doppio ravioli with smoked scallop, pumpkin and cider and testarolo with preserved tomato, whole-belly clams, chili and oregano are meant as a second course. Entrees include a few steaks, like bone-in rib-eye, sirloin and Denver, as well as lobster and sweetbreads with caviar potato gnocchi, cranberry, seabeans and bottarga.

"I'm trying to find a way to make sure the classical way of dining has some kind of a return in a very casual environment," Batista-Caswell says. "I still believe in that style of dining."

The dessert menu, overseen by executive pastry chef Brian Mercury (Harvest), features dishes like a chocolate tart and cranberry swirl fro-yo. Mercury also heads up the bread program, which will include baked goods for departing customers to enjoy the next morning. "Brian's such a big part of what we do, but people don't always leave room for dessert," Batista-Caswell explains. "So we're going to do take-aways to showcase Brian's talent. ... If they didn't leave room for dessert, come back for it."

She similarly hopes to showcase the talents of bar manager Chris O'Neill and the bar staff with a cocktail cart that will allow batched cocktails to be poured tableside, giving diners a sense of the action. The wine list of 70-80 bottles will focus on European vintners. The bar itself will seat 22, with room for about 40-50 at nearby tables. A narrow space off that room will hold 20 at a communal table that sits under lights that were repurposed from the "B, W, C" letters on the old Boston Wharf Company sign. On the other side of that space will be a 30-seat private dining area overlooking the open kitchen. The building's loading dock doors will remain, giving a few customers a feeling of alfresco dining inside a space that's full of brick and wooden beams. "If it's too minimal, it's not enough. If it's too much, then it's distracting," Batista-Caswell says of the design. "I always want to make sure that the food is still the centerpiece—and the service. Because we're performing; it's a show essentially. We're on stage."

BIG BEAR: Hi B3ar dishes out Thai ice cream rolls.

Good Eats: Let's Roll

You'll order Hi B3ar's Thai ice cream rolls for the Instagram likes, but you'll return once you dig into the dessert—the first of its kind in Boston. The tiny Allston counter-service joint that opened in August offers standard flavors like chocolate, Oreo and mango, but don't miss Matcha Lady, a matcha tea-flavored base that's mixed to order with chopped red beans and then frozen on a flat steel plate, each strip coiled into individual rolls with a spatula. Toppings are unlimited, but this savory-leaning treat shines when paired with the sweetness of strawberries, Pocky sticks, a drizzle of chocolate syrup and a torched marshmallow that's sure to make for one fire post. / Meghan Kavanaugh

VIVA ITALIA

The chardonnay backlash has barely affected Italian versions of every sommelier's least favorite grape because so few people know that Italy even produces the grape. Based on my current blind tastings, this well-kept secret most definitely needs to be told: From Alto Adige to Piemonte and from Toscana to Umbria, there is delicious chardonnay available in a variety of styles. While most favor classic European understatement, there are many that will satisfy your taste for toast as well as any California expression. The following are standouts. / Sandy Block

CASTELLO DELLA SALA "BRAMITO DEL CERVO," UMBRIA IGT

Produced by the venerable house of Antinori, this wine was ahead of the curve with its first production in 1994. It's all smoothness and roundness on the palate, with ripe apple and fig-like fruit and a creamy texture. Featuring subtle notes of buttered popcorn and a mild-but-lingering finish, it would be ideal with a white-sauce pasta.

$20, V. Ciroce & Son, Boston

CABREO "LA PIETRA" CHARDONNAY, TOSCANA IGT, 2013

This wine's lineage dates back to the 1980s, and its aromatics feature almond, apple, pear skin and vanilla. Clean, ripe and fresh, with tuned-up acids and a minerally lemon-peel edge, this is a beautifully balanced chardonnay that's versatile enough for broiled lobster or more delicate white fish fillets.

$42, Morty's Fine Wines, Newton

ISOLE E OLENA "COLLEZIONE PRIVATA" CHARDONNAY, TOSCANA IGT, 2014

This great chianti producer's chardonnay is a dead ringer for white burgundy. This vintage features a lavish velvety texture, with elegant notes of baking spices and fresh apples. Crisp, but with hints of cream and toasted herbs, it would make a great partner for an opulently flavored seafood stew.

$36, Colonial Spirits, Acton

Out of THE VAULT 25 YEARS

The Improper is celebrating its 25th anniversary in 2016, and to properly mark the occasion, we've been digging through the archives for gems from issues past. Behold some culinary treats, from carnivorous coupling to bon mots by top toques.

June 30, 1999

Here, Jonathan Soroff asked Cambridge's longtime culinary treasure Julia Child for gourmet dish. Her ideal last meal: "Caviar and some good wine to go with it .... Some fresh foie gras and some oysters. Then I'd have a Channel sole meunière with a nice white wine, and then a nice duck dish of some type. Some fresh asparagus. And then a big, gooey chocolate dessert." But she also offered some not-so-gourmet food for thought. Her preferred McDonald's order: "The quarter pounder."

Sept. 12, 2001

The rather, um, lascivious gentleman on the cover of our '01 Boston Dining issue set the tone for the content, which included a feature on meat markets, local joints where hungry singles could indulge their "inner carnivore with a prime cut of beef (seared on the outside, pink on the inside) and chat up an appealing rump roast." We dare you to top that tally of meat-based sexual innuendos in one sentence.

June 9, 2010

For an interview in our Summer Dining issue, everyone's favorite roguish toque, Anthony Bourdain, reminisced about the days when cooks were "doing rails through uncooked penne" and, on a more wholesome note, copped to the holiday meal he most enjoys preparing, Thanksgiving dinner—which gets a whole chapter in his new cookbook, Appetites, hitting shelves on Oct. 25. "Writing is a helluva lot easier [than cooking]," he added. "You're not in a submarine-sized space in 110-degree heat, working your ass off."

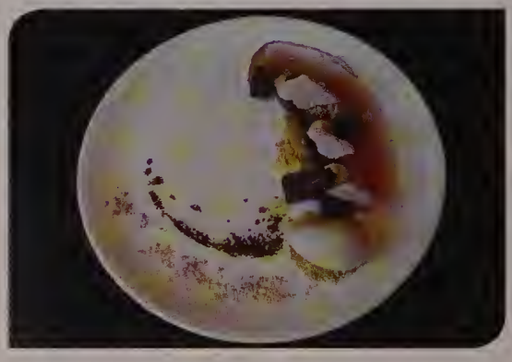
FOREVER YOUNG

You don't have to grow up with these sweet upgrades from the kids' menu. / Sarah Hagman and Meghan Kavanaugh

Pastry chef Liz O'Connell grew up near the Hostess factory in Framingham, leaning her head out the car window to smell the baked goods, so it's no wonder an After Dinner Twinkie has made its way onto the dessert snack menu at Yvonne's. Her grown-up take features a chocolate sponge cake that she soaks in sweet espresso and fills with Cognac-spiked ricotta before immersing the entire treat in melted Valrhona chocolate. "I like the contrast and nostalgia of a kid's dessert that has been infused with luxury ingredients," she says.

$7 at Yvonne's, 2 Winter Place, Boston (617-267-0047) yvonnesboston.com



"Cookie dough is one of my favorite foods," says Little Donkey chef/owner Ken Oringer, who used to share batter-licking duty with his three siblings as a kid. He took that inspiration literally with the Cambridge restaurant's chocolate chip cookie dough, served right on the beater alongside a milk foam sprinkled with sea salt and either mini chocolate chips or cocoa nibs. The best part? No need to worry about raw ingredients. "We use pasteurized egg yolks so there's no risk," adds chef/owner Jamie Bissonnette, "You can really go to town on this one!"

Chef Nick Dixon always made a mad dash for cereal when his dad returned from the grocery store. "Growing up with four older sisters, all of the 'good stuff' would quickly disappear," he recalls. So when Lincoln started offering a Test Kitchen menu on Fridays to try out brunch dishes that could be a little trickier to get out during the weekend rush, he knew his childhood favorite would come into play. With the Fruity Pebbles pancakes, the Flintstone flakes not only fleck the batter, but are steeped with vanilla beans in a "rich and creamy" cereal milk anglaise that tops the stack—now a regular staple on Saturdays and Sundays.

A native Floridian, chef Robert Gonzalez often had to improvise when he had a hankering for a s'more: "We would microwave Hershey's chocolate and a marshmallow right on top." But at Bistro du Midi, his spin on s'mores—listed as "campfire memories" on his prep list—is the real deal, using three varieties of Valrhona chocolate in a Kahlua-spiked custard and brownie bites smoked with applewood chips. "I love to take classic dessert dishes and convert them into a gorgeous and unique plate," he says of this deconstruction, which also includes ground housemade graham crackers, cherry meringue and marshmallow ice cream that spares fingers from the treat's trademark gooeyness.

FUNNY STUFF

What Kathleen Madigan lacks in stature, she's made up for in career longevity. The 5-foot, 1-inch comedian has been touring for almost three decades, keeping busy in her downtime by making appearances on a host of TV and web shows, including a recent episode of Jerry Seinfeld's Comedians in Cars Getting Coffee. We caught up with the comedian to talk showbiz and politics before her show at the Wilbur Theatre on Oct. 14. / Alexandra Cavallo

DO YOU PREFER LIVE STAND-UP OR TV? I'd rather do live stuff than the TV stuff. There's something contrived about TV that's kind of off-putting. I think everyone's too uptight because it's filmed. There's something about cameras that makes people—including the audience—a little too weirded out.

WHAT WAS YOUR WORST STAND-UP SET? It was 100 years ago. It was called Bob Hope's Ladies of Laughter. He was like 10,000 years old. And they must have brought the audience out from, like, a senior center, because my parents were the youngest people in the crowd. And that was horrifying. I think they thought I was just this terrible young person. [Laughs.] It did not work out well.

SO WERE YOU THE FUNNY KID IN SCHOOL, ALWAYS CUTTING UP THE CLASS? Oh no, I went to Catholic school. I mean, they would have kicked you out!

WHERE DO YOU FIND INSPIRATION FOR MATERIAL? For the last 25 years, not on purpose, it seems to be the same recurring subjects of politics, sports, my family and travel. Travel meaning all the things that happen on the road or I've seen on the road. The only thing I don't really do is pop culture stuff. Kathy Griffin does it really well, and there only needs to be one 5-foot-tall redheaded woman doing that. And I don't even know it. Like if a Kardashian came in this house, I wouldn't know it was a Kardashian. I'd just be like, "There's a strange lady in my kitchen!"

TRANSFORMATION

Balls* by Chris Edwards
Published by Greenleaf Book Group, 272 pages, $25

LET'S START WITH THE WIT AND BUOYANCY of Chris Edwards, whose father was the CEO of Arnold Worldwide, the advertising firm where Chris worked as a copywriter and creative director. Now the book's story: Chris was born Kristin and started transitioning in the mid-'90s, a time when the term "transgender" was in very few vocabularies.

You might expect a forgivably ponderous book, but Chris makes it adventurous and fun—even when describing 28 surgeries that took about a decade. But first, we watch as Kris carefully tells friends and co-workers of his intentions, preparing them, and himself, for the personal, psychological and physical drama ahead. Drawing on his marketing know-how, he enlists them as "brand evangelists" for Team Edwards and briefs a boardroom of executives on the new Chris. One big plus: His family was highly sympathetic, and his mother was present at many sensitive medical events, which are candidly chronicled in chapters with titles like "Take my uterus. Please." Nurses and friends appreciate the brave charm of our hero, and two doctors become almost like mischievous friends amid challenging surgeries, including ones to transform the skin on his arm, smoothed with painful laser treatments, into a long-sought badge of masculine identity: a "deluxe model" penis.

As the medical ordeals end, love interests come and go; surgery, fortunately, had not removed his sense of humor, even when an intercourse-enabling pump fails. Then, wonderfully, he finds Mary, and they spend years in love, traveling exotically together. The author draws a veil over the details, maintaining well-deserved privacy, at last.

FROM PAGE 115: And once I put on the black onyx cufflinks and studs, black silk bowtie and cummerbund, and shiny patent leather tuxedo shoes, I took a look in the mirror. Holy shit! Who let James Bond in here? On a scale of 1 to 10, I was definitely a 007. And when I strode into the Harvard Club, just one among a sea of penguins, I finally felt like I belonged to a different club—the one I'd been denied entry to since birth. ◆

ATTENTION OENOPHILES: WINE COUNTRY IS ONLY A COUPLE OF HOURS AWAY.

BORDEAUX—BEAUTIFUL! NAPA VALLEY, what a place. Loudoun County... where?

If that last destination hasn't yet made it onto your traveling wine lover's bucket list, you're forgiven. But Virginia is America's fifth-largest producer of wine grapes—and Loudoun County, though it sounds like the setting for a particularly painful suburban high school reunion ("Let's go, Loudoun Wildcats'88!"), is leading the charge in the Old Dominion State. Host to last year's international Wine Tourism Conference, Loudoun boasts more than 40 wineries, more than any other Virginia county, set amid rolling verdant hills just outside of Washington, DC.

Moral of the story: If you're a roving oenophile who wants to sip through a top-notch selection of New World grapes, this picturesque 'burb is a 90-minute flight away—much closer, and more cost-effective, than a sojourn through Sonoma.

Unpack and uncork at the Lansdowne Resort and Spa, a Four Diamond property that sits on 476 acres overlooking the Potomac River in Loudoun's county seat of Leesburg. That's quite the backyard view to enjoy from one of the 296 recently renovated guestrooms and suites, all appropriately outfitted with vineyard photography on the walls, desk chair upholstery that recalls the look of wine cork and shelves stocked with books on food and wine.

Granted, you don't need to be a wino to unwind here. Fresh-air fans will appreciate that the expansive resort offers pro-designed courses with 45 holes of championship golf, plus "FootGolf," which is basically a soccer-style version of the sport, along with five pools, three tennis courts and hiking and biking trails. But the Lansdowne definitely makes the most of Loudoun's wine offerings. Bottle lists run deep at the resort's several restaurants, including the just-opened gastropub Coton & Rye, named for the 18th-century farm that once stood on the property, where locally produced wines wash down contemporized takes on traditional mid-Atlantic dishes like fried chicken platters and pot pies. Lansdowne's spa offerings include a body wrap that paints guests with crushed cabernet grapes and mani-pedis paired with malbec and chardonnay. And unsurprisingly, the resort organizes weekend excursions to area wineries.

If you'd rather sip un-chaperoned, we have a few suggestions for a self-guided tour. Visit Leesburg's family-owned Stone Tower Winery, a postcard-pretty plot that covers 60 acres with grape varieties ranging from viognier to pinot noir. Only a few years old, the property is open to tours—behold fermentation tanks of oak, concrete and steel, each imbuing wines with different characteristics—and of course, Stone Tower offers tastings inside the requisite barn.

More aged, yet still on the cutting edge, is neighboring Middleburg's 19-year-old Chrysalis Vineyards, where Loudoun County's beautiful Bull Run Mountains are a backdrop to several hundred acres' worth of award-winning wine production. Enjoy the fruits of that labor on the spacious patio or inside a modern-rustic tasting room that is trending in a high-tech direction: Soon guests will be able to purchase tasting cards worth varying quantities of pours at automated stations. Chrysalis especially celebrates the Norton grape, a crossbred variety introduced by Daniel Norton in Virginia in the early 19th century. It is now considered America's oldest native grape.

Other standouts on your sip trip include Bluemont Vineyard, where the tasting room, elevated 951 feet above sea level, offers panoramic views of Loudoun County—and plays host to live music and visiting food trucks. And hop heads can take heart: Though it's best known for its wineries, the region also has a fast-growing craft beer scene, with about 20 brewers scattered across the area's drivable "LoCo Ale Trail." Among our favorites is Old Ox Brewery, where the taproom pours signature pints like Black Ox, a coffee- and chocolate-accented rye porter, and rotating experiments like Transfusion, a farmhouse lager made with apricot.

Old Ox is also one of the local beers you're most likely to find on tap at area bars and restaurants. So keep an eye peeled when poking around historic downtown Leesburg, a charming enclave of colonial-era architecture that now serves as a major bedroom community for DC commuters. Perhaps unsurprisingly, given the concentration of politicos, Loudoun is the wealthiest county in the country—and you'll find some of the hipper well-heeled 30-somethings stuffing themselves at the Wine Kitchen, where the seasonal New American menu encompasses everything from low country seafood boils to cheese and charcuterie platters sourced from local farms. The smart wine list arranges flights, which include hard-to-find selections, by varietal and geographic themes like "Pinot Envy" and "The Plains of Spain." Afterward, shake it off at Chimole, a Honduran art gallery slash tapas joint that hosts live music and a boisterous late-night scene that sees mojito-soaked hip shaking in the midst of the restaurant's makeshift dance floor. We'll drink to that. ◆

TIN STAR

HALEY.HENRY STUFFS A TINY DOWNTOWN SPACE WITH WINE-BAR WONDERS.

Downtown Crossing's fortunes have brightened a lot since the bad old days of the Filene's Hole. Nowadays, swank restaurants are debuting all over the neighborhood, the most recent of which is haley.henry, a pocket-sized wine bar just around the corner from the gleaming new Millennium Tower skyscraper. First-time owner Haley Fortier, a Barbara Lynch Gruppo veteran, has packed an enormous amount of charm, fun and good eating into a narrow spot with just 18 bar seats and a couple of four-tops.

It leads with a brilliant idea: Fortier will open any of its 51 bottles ($36-$180, most under $60) if you buy two glasses at half the bottle price. With another six by-the-glass options ($11-$15) and three sherries ($7-$13), it's much easier to take a dive deep into its eclectic, mostly-small-producer, biodynamic-leaning list. That led us to beauties like the 2015 Eraldo Revelli Dolcetto Rosata ($26/half bottle), a lightly sweet Northern Italian rosé with a funkily alkaline middle, a 2013 Tenuta Tarraviva ($24/half), a ferociously tart orange wine, and the 2015 Rado Kocijancic Refosk ($22/half) from Slovenia, a light-bodied, garnet draft of sour-cherry chewiness and bracing acid. There are also a dozen beers ($5-$14) and one amaro, the clovey/licoricey German bitters Underberg ($4).

For simple, savory accompaniment, you could start with Not Your Grandpa's Nuts ($7), a fancy mix of sweet/hot glazed nuts. But chef de cuisine Carolina Curtin (another Gruppo alumna) has assembled a Greatest Hits of 21st Century Grazing, and few wine-laced journeys are more pleasant than with a charcuterie board (three meats for $21, five for $32) with standouts like darkly creamy chicken liver mousse, a slate of Mangalica ($18), which tastes like fancier air-cured Spanish hams at a nicer price, or a cheese board (three cuts for $20, five for $30) served at the right temperature with chefly accompaniments like house-made almond butter and candied fennel.

An attractively composed salad of roasted carrots ($14) combines papery slices and whole carrots with a carrot-top pistou, some coriander-scented, yogurt-like kefir underneath and headily earthy sprouted lentils. Raw options include a mild, tender lamb tartare ($11) topped with peak-season blackberries and arugula, plus a shower of shaved bottarga, the ocean-redolent condiment of Sardinia: pressed, dried, long-cured grey mullet roe sack. This odd-sounding foodstuff is borderline magical, best experienced unadorned in bread, butter & bottarga ($6), where its briny funk and rich, Maine-lobster-like umami comes through. There's also one spectacular panino ($15), a juicy chicken breast crumbed in crushed potato chips with tomato, arugula and aioli, press-grilled between good multigrain bread.

That leads us to haley.henry's main event, its selection of tinned seafoods, each served in its opened can on a slate with an array of accompaniments. You take the foundation (fresh bread or ridged potato chips), smear it with a condiment (an herb or espelette aioli, or coarse-grained mustard, or butter), add fresh parsley, then the seafood, then sprinkle on some fresh lemon juice and flaky sea salt: voila, mini-tartine. Set aside your preconceptions of wan American canned tuna or crummy pizza-topping anchovies: These seafoods are the work of artisans revered in their native Spain, Portugal and the Azores. They range from quite mild and not especially salty or smoky to intensely flavored enough to make you dizzy, but all make for a hugely fun roundelay of flavors to mix and match with those lovely wines.

On the mild side, there are sardines in oil and lemon ($22) and chub mackerel ($18) from Lisbon, both far less oily and funky than novices might expect, or sweet, firm-fleshed tuna in molho cru sauce ($19) from the Azores. Meatier and richer are choices like Portuguese octopus in garlic and olive oil ($28) and the lightly fiery smoked oysters in habanero ($16) from Washington State (a rare quality American purveyor), though smoking gives oysters an almost chalky texture. American smoked mussels ($14) offer little nuggets of concentrated smoke and sea, potato chips offering both a practical vessel and a nicely salty counterpoint. Two highlights include smoked eels ($18) from Lisbon, not so far off from the beloved unagi of Japanese cuisine, and for advanced tinned-seafood eaters, Spanish anchovies in olive oil ($27), deep red in color and so concentrated in flavor—in the way strong blue cheeses or great dark chocolate can be—you might swoon. If you think you've been around the world but don't know first-rate canned seafood, here's where to get to know it.

GM Kristie Weiss (also ex-Gruppo) oversees a genial, warm staff that clearly loves the wine and food yet understands the need to educate locals on a novel concept. At peak periods, the tiny, vaguely nautically themed room, which crams its entire kitchen behind the bar, with wine storage and larder occupying an overhead loft, offers pretty tight quarters, but it's airy overhead and light-filled enough with its wall of street-facing windows to avoid claustrophobia and unbearable decibel levels. DTX is about to see a surge of well-heeled, far-traveled new neighbors who grok that beautiful wines and canned fish can be a luxury; haley.henry is perfectly poised to welcome them. You might want to elbow in yourself before the mobs arrive. ◆

ASK CHERYL

Q: ARE BOTOX AND DYSPORT JUST FOR WOMEN? PEOPLE ASK ME IF I AM ANGRY BECAUSE IT LOOKS LIKE I AM ALWAYS FROWNING, SO I'M THINKING ABOUT TRYING IT, BUT I'M A GUY AND WANT TO LOOK MASCULINE.

A: Go for it! Men are the fastest growing segment of botulinum toxin patients. The key to a natural look for men is to not over do the treatment. A few lines will keep you looking masculine and wise; but lines that are too deep and prevalent will make you look older, more tired and grumpy.

Botox or Dysport subtly smooth the lines around your eyes and between your brows for results that keep you looking like yourself, just more rested. Take charge of the aging process with a treatment that can give you natural-looking results with a quick office visit and no downtime. At SkinHealth we have been seeing amazing results; call us for your free consultation!

BLOOD FOR OIL

MARK WAHLBERG HONORS THE FALLEN IN THIS DRAMATIZATION OF THE BP OIL DISASTER.

IF YOU'RE CONCERNED THAT DIRECTOR Peter Berg's upcoming film Patriots Day—starring Mark Wahlberg as a fictional police sergeant involved in the manhunt for the Boston Marathon bombers—might exploit victims of the horrible tragedy that befell our city less than four years ago, you might breathe a little easier after seeing Wahlberg's latest, Deepwater Horizon, a thriller based on true events. This second successful collaboration between the Boston-born actor and Berg comes on the heels of the duo's last torn-from-true-life film, 2013's surprise hit Lone Survivor, an Afghanistan-set drama about a Navy SEAL mission gone bad. Their new nail-biter, which dramatizes the events surrounding the worst oil disaster in American history, honors the 126 heroic workers on the titular oil rig, 11 of whom lost their lives after explosions ripped through a Transocean-owned, BP-leased drilling unit located 41 miles off the Louisiana coast on April 20, 2010.

Although Berg has certainly aimed to thrill an audience once the shit—plus a lot of mud and oil—hits the fan, he isn't afraid to point fingers while he entertains. You'll likely come away very angry at BP, if you weren't already. The hissable "BP guys" are led by Donald Vidrine (a drawling John Malkovich), who's so crude you wonder why our heroes don't skip the bottom of the ocean and simply mine him for oil instead. Forty-three days behind schedule and $53 million over budget, Vidrine has begun cutting corners, sending home safety crews responsible for testing the cement used for plugging the Macondo Well before the job is done. "We are confident in the integrity of our see-ment," Vidrine insists through his Cheshire cat grin, although crew chief Jimmy Harrell (a well-cast Kurt Russell), affectionately known as "Mr. Jimmy" by his men (including Ethan Suplee's Jason Anderson and Dylan O'Brien's Caleb Holloway), isn't so sure.

Neither is chief electronics technician Mike Williams (Wahlberg, who's also a producer on the film), a family man who we first see at home in bed with his wife Felicia (Kate Hudson). Since Mike's about to be off on his rig for the next three weeks, Felicia wants a little love. "Do you want the 30-, 60- or 90-second plan?" he asks before Berg playfully cuts to a shot of Mike using a screwdriver on a kitchen cabinet door a short while later, as his young daughter Sydney (Stella Allen), a science enthusiast, eats breakfast nearby. When the girl asks her dad how he pumps oil at work, he informs her that the Deepwater Horizon doesn't pump oil, but only drills for it before moving on, demonstrating one of the rig's drilling procedures in miniature with a Coke can as a prop. Unexpectedly—and ominously—it begins spewing forth its contents, a harbinger of things to come.

Wahlberg...anchors the movie with his reliably well-oiled performance as an average Joe.

The omens continue to add up during these early domestic scenes, when we're also introduced to deputy dynamic positioning officer Andrea Fleytas (Gina Rodriguez of TV's Jane the Virgin), whose vintage Mustang won't start as she attempts to depart for work. Even the copter that carries Mr. Jimmy, Mike and Andrea—along with a pair of BP execs (James DuMont and Joe Chrest) who are ironically along to surprise Mr. Jimmy with the company's top safety award during a photo op that literally makes him want to take a shower—is impacted by a "bird strike," another bad sign, as viewers of Clint Eastwood's Sully can attest.

More birds show up later, of course, covered in oil, unable to fly and gasping for air—horrific visual embodiments of the environmental calamity caused by the disaster that still afflicts the Gulf of Mexico to this day.

And what a disaster it is. Although Berg isn't in the business of exploitation here, you'll definitely get what you paid for once things begin going BOOM, aided by stunning visual effects that—just like in Sully—never look like they were created on a computer. Balls of fire and plumes of smoke fill the screen as metal and glass rain down (the chaotic sound design is worth noting as well). It's an apocalyptic vision that's downright biblical, a notion reinforced late in the picture by Berg and screenwriters Matthew Michael Carnahan and Matthew Sand when they focus on a sea of survivors as they kneel down, bow their heads and recite the Lord's Prayer.

But before they pray together, they seemingly go to hell and back, in flaming visions that are made all the more powerful by the hour of buildup as Berg tightens the screws, cutting to foreboding shots of underwater fissures. All the while, Malkovich's vile Vidrine haunts the background of the frames like Mephistopheles, a twinkle in his eye as he goads our heroes into proceeding with a drill they don't feel is safe. And while you may not understand all of the chatter about "kill lines" and "negative pressure tests," it certainly adds to the proceedings, as does Berg's decision to build and shoot on a nearly full-sized replica of the Deepwater Horizon. It may not have been cheap, but it definitely feels authentic—as does Wahlberg, who anchors the movie with his reliably well-oiled performance as an average Joe who does what he can to not only save himself, but everyone around him. More than just a thrilling action movie, the end result is a moving testament to the 11 souls who lost their lives. ◆

GOOD TO BE QUEEN

A FRENCH UPSTART FINDS FREE EXPRESSION IN ELECTRO-POP, DANCE AND GENDER

CHRISTINE AND THE QUEENS unfurled one of the most captivating sets at Boston Calling's May farewell to City Hall Plaza, largely thanks to the French electro-pop act's playful, near-constant choreography. Yet the most poignant move came when frontwoman Christine—born Héloïse Letissier—paused to reflect on pieces of a bouquet, comparing Beyoncé and Rihanna to stately flowers before proudly equating herself to a crooked stem in a symbol of freedom and unity.

"I loved to pay an homage to those amazing, flawless pop stars we have, but I do feel like we need many different presences," Letissier recalls from her Paris home before Christine and the Queens return to enliven the Paradise Rock Club on Oct. 12. "I kind of see myself as this presence that brings something a bit more flawed. But then again, I always related to freaks or people who could be out of the norm."

Letissier, 28, truly felt like an outcast at 22 when she wandered into a London gay bar called Madame Jojo's. "I was stretching for something to happen to me because I was quite lost in every way," says Letissier, who was frustrated in her theatrical and literary pursuits and reeling from a fractured love affair. She became a regular, befriending the drag queens who performed there. "They gave me important notions, for example that my gender was a construction," says Letissier, who identifies as queer or pansexual. "You realize that everything is a game really, and you get to play by the rules, or don't... You can subvert them."

So she adopted the alter ego Christine and the Queens in a nod to her saviors. "I gave myself a new name to be fully myself," Letissier says. "When I'm Christine onstage, I'm just more daring. I'm kind of unfiltered and really free." The queens suggested that she try singing, and the onetime piano student began writing songs, composing with the computer program GarageBand.

"I kind of see myself as this presence that brings something a bit more flawed. But then again, I always related to freaks."

The reborn artist quickly blossomed in France, leading to her 2014 album, Chaleur Humaine, released last October in the U.S. under the title Christine and the Queens. "I translated the French

CHRISTINE AND THE QUEENS
play the Paradise Rock Club on Oct. 12.

album for it to be more in English," Letissier says of the bilingual release. "But before that, even [for] the French album, I drafted some songs in English before I actually wrote them in French, because I do like to play with sounds and words."

Those sounds prove both organic and ethereal, as Letissier's airy voice flows in uncanny synch with programmed rhythms and synths on a minimalist palette, aided on record by producer Ash Workman and multi-instrumentalist brothers Michael Lovett and Gabriel Stebbing. And her words play on issues of identity in songs like "iT" and the "Tilted," a term that "metaphorically and literally could mean out of balance," Letissier explains. "I'm a man now, and there's nothing you can do to make me change my mind," she sings in "iT," in which she adopts necessary male accoutrements while facing the view that "She'll lose because it's a fake."

"I liked this idea of Christine trying to be a character that breaks barriers, but I'm still in this given society," she says. "I say to people, 'Think of me as a male rock star,' because then you can stop thinking about annoying things that we put on female celebrities. We always end up commenting on how they are dressed and who they want to fuck and why it's acceptable and why it's not. And those are questions we never ask of male performers."

For inspirations, Letissier draws on favorites as broad as Kendrick Lamar and Kanye West (she sings an adaptation of his "Heartless"), performance-art siren Laurie Anderson and, particularly, Michael Jackson, whose influence fuels her vocals and dancing. "He was truly incandescent and alive and burning when he was performing," she says.

As for how she dresses onstage, the singer tends to blend with the T-shirts and gray slacks of her male musicians and fellow dancers. Likewise, their movement seems casual and egalitarian. "I didn't want to have these really rehearsed, rigid routines that pop stars sometimes have," Letissier says. "It's more like vibing all together." ◆

GRILL THRILLS

NOTHING SEASONS A BURGER QUITE LIKE A DASH OF DANGER.

I'M A MODERN GUY. A FEMINIST. I FLOUT outmoded notions of gender roles, which were constructed by an authoritarian patriarchy invested in maintaining the incumbent power structure. I believe the wage gap is a disgrace, and I am aware of my cisgender privilege. Now, with all of that said: Me grill. Me man, and man grill. Fire for man. Make meat hot! Ouch, ouch! Fire make hand hot too! Should've listened to woman about gloves.

I don't claim to be a good cook, but the grill is my domain. Guests salute my artistry with the searing burner, my subtle char on the corn, my nearly salmonella-free presentation of the chicken sausages. I know that my wife, Heather, could grill just as well as I do, if not better. But she doesn't, because she lets me have that. She allows me to prod the steaks and flip the burgers and baste the chicken with a subtle marinade of testosterone and pride. And to raise my self-esteem just a little bit higher (or possibly to tear it down), she got me a Big Green Egg.

The Big Green Egg, if you're not familiar, is an ovoid ceramic grill that inspires cultish devotion. Heather got me one to serve as a birthday/anniversary/Christmas gift for probably the next decade. I don't know how much it cost, exactly, but I expect that this purchase set back my retirement by at least five years. Five mouth-watering, smoke-infused, fall-off-the-bone years.

The Egg itself is merely the starting point in your colossal grilling investment. I also had to buy fireproof gloves, an electric fire starter, bags of lump charcoal, a ceramic heat diffuser, a wheeled stand, charcoal tongs, a pizza stone, a pizza peel and a digital thermometer. I maintained some self-restraint, though. I didn't get the official dough rolling mat or the patio string lights or the "chef's flavor injector," which brings to mind an anesthesia device that would've been used by an unlicensed equine veterinarian circa 1901. I don't need my cooking utensils to look like they came out of the basement in American Horror Story.

The Egg is powered by lump charcoal, and I'm going to admit that I still don't really understand what lump charcoal is. I mean, it looks like wood that's already been burned, but I guess you can burn it some more? All I know is that I have to light the charcoal with an electric torch that is the second most dangerous thing I own, after the Big Green Egg. The red-hot tip of the torch causes sparks to explode in all directions, tiny meteors sizzling out onto your arms, the deck, passing gasoline tanker trucks, etc. Once your charred wood is somehow reanimated with unholy fire summoned from a door that should never have been opened, then you've got to figure out what to do with the torch, the tip of which is still in a state of plasma and will remain so for the rest of the week. I stash it inside my gas grill, the only prison that can hold it.

Supposedly, people buy the Big Green Egg because it makes your food taste better. That might be partly true—beer-can chicken with a Harpoon Flannel Friday was the best use of beer since drinking it—but I think the real appeal lies in the danger. I mean, sure, my gas grill is a little bit dangerous. It sometimes erupts in a raging grease fire, and lighting the outer burner means staging a controlled propane explosion. But compared to the Big Green Egg, a gas grill is as dangerous as a Snoopy Sno Cone Machine. The Egg is a cauldron of calamity, a 700-degree fire kettle that's equally happy smoking some ribs or smoking your entire neighborhood down to smoldering ruins. You have to "burp" the Egg before you open it, lest a shock-wave remove your eyebrows. Call me Kenny Loggins, because I'm in the danger zone.

You have to "burp" the Egg before you open it, lest a shock wave remove your eyebrows.

Roughly the first 300 pages of the BGE owner's manual are devoted to warnings about the many ways in which you can ruin the Egg or yourself. The forums—and yes, there are forums—are filled with photos of charred tables and decks. Basically, you want to surround the Egg with those tiles that protect the bottom of the Space Shuttle when re-entering the atmosphere. Then you put on one of those silver suits worn by foundry workers who tend the blast furnace. Then you wheel your Egg to a safe location, ideally the middle of the Mojave Desert. Even so, you're still in mortal peril. One guy on a forum wrote about how he lit his Egg out on his driveway and nonetheless burned down his house when an ember blew into the garage. So badass.

Since we got the Egg, I'd say 80 percent of our meals have been grilled (the other 20 percent: smoked). In fact, I'm about to fire it up right now—chicken thighs, pork tenderloin and maybe a steak. Hey, come on over! Dinner's ready when you hear the sirens. ◆

MONEY TALKS

SOUND ADVICE ON COST ANALYSIS, NEIGHBOR NEEDS AND JOB HUNTING ON THE CLOCK

JOHN D. SPOONER IS AN INVESTMENT ADVISER, author and novelist. His most recent book is No One Ever Told Us That: Money and Life Lessons for Young Adults. Here, he responds to queries from advice seekers of all ages. Send your conundrums to thedance@improper.com.

DOLLARS AND SENSE: Questions about money are often best left unasked.

My girlfriend asks people what things cost. It's getting embarrassing. It seems like every time we go out with friends, she has to know what the other couple spent on their vacation or dinner or that new dress. Isn't it enough to say, "You look nice," without having to know what everything cost? One of these days she's going to ask the wrong person, and I think they're going to put her in her place.

She is a great person in so many ways, but clueless about money matters. She recently asked someone what they paid for their wedding. I cringed. What can I do to wake her up and avoid this pending disaster? I tried telling her that people don't like to discuss such personal things, but she doesn't believe me.

Sex and money are the two things people are most dishonest about. I know it's true; I wrote a book with that title, which haunts me wherever I go. Personal questions in the workplace are particularly tricky. These days, in offices, you could be called into the HR police to explain your insensitive questioning. And there are those who see affront in every sentence and facial expression. So you have to be very careful about your conversations in the workplace.

For years, people have asked me about my writing life, things like "Do you ever make any money from that?" Or "How about my free autographed copy?" Or "How many copies did your latest book sell?"

I usually answer them, "Your wife is a dermatologist. What would you think if I asked her what she makes annually?" No one asks people how much money they make, unless they're clueless or insensitive or rude. Sadly, the average person thinks that people who write or paint or act are not really working for a living. So I never answer the question. But I tell them, "Well, let's put it this way. I have a seven-figure retirement account." And leave it at that.

We all know people who care about the cost of everything and the true value of nothing. Like friendship and civility and common sense. Your girlfriend likely wouldn't want to be mistaken for one of them, so you may have to be a little dramatic. Tell her that it's rude to ask what people paid for various things. You can say, "Didn't your parents ever teach you anything?" The strong messages make an impact. Of course, you may have to listen to her complain about her parents. But it all may teach her to wise up.

I've recently been elected to the board of the condo association where I live. Already, people are calling, emailing, stopping me in the lobby, complaining about things. I feel like quitting before I'm even officially on the board. How do I play this job, for which I don't get paid? I've felt for a long time that certain organizations—country clubs, condo or co-op boards, gated communities—should be run by benevolent dictatorships, not democracies. Do you remember the Dr. Seuss description of "Tweetle Beetle battles"? Basically, they're arguments about things that don't matter much at all, small issues that nonetheless stick in people's craws and obsess them, to the point that they cannot let it go. You'll encounter many of these if you stay on your condo board, but you will also learn a lot, particularly about people: the good, the bad and, occasionally, the very ugly.

You may have to be a little dramatic. Tell her that it's rude to ask what people paid for various things.

This can be a real education for you, because condo management is basically a small business, and it can be like graduate school as well. You'll learn economics, finance, psychology, psychiatry and negotiation, as well as down-and-dirty human nature. You won't get paid. But it can be a priceless experience.

Just do it. There are term limits; it's not a lifetime sentence. And you'll learn a lot about yourself.

My boss caught me looking at LinkedIn on the office computer. How can I convince him I wasn't job hunting? (I have no problem lying since I was looking at job openings at other companies!) I'd love to see a figure on how many dollars in productivity businesses lose annually to employees shopping online, watching sports, texting friends and family or job hunting. It happens in every office and is almost impossible to police.

The most successful person perhaps ever in Boston advertising had "Burn no bridges" as his premier principle in life. But you've now poisoned the well with your boss. He will never look at you quite the same way again, no matter how strongly you protest your innocence.

So good luck on your job hunt. And try to not make the same mistake again. Keep your office computer wanderings to things like Gilt.com and fantasy football. ◆

Soroff On / Garrett Harker

THE RESTAURATEUR DISHES ON KENMORE SQUARE, TIPPING AND THE PERFECT COCKTAIL

RESTAURATEUR GARRETT HARKER, 49, WAS BORN and raised in Baltimore. He began in the restaurant industry at age 15, washing dishes and busing tables, and after graduating from Pomona College, he moved to San Francisco to work for the Kimpton Group. He became the youngest general manager in the company's history while working at Scala's Bistro, and after moving to Boston in 1998, he became general manager of No. 9 Park. Together, he and Barbara Lynch opened B&G Oysters and the Butcher Shop, but in 2005, Harker went out on his own by opening Eastern Standard in Kenmore Square. Island Creek Oyster Bar, the Hawthorne, Row 34, Row 34 Portsmouth and Branch Line followed, and Harker is now working on a new concept in the former Conductor's Building in Harvard Square. Named 2016's Restaurateur of the Year by the Massachusetts Restaurant Association, he lives in Boston.

JONATHAN SOROFF: Biggest advantage of being a front-of-the-house restaurateur as opposed to the chef?
GARRETT HARKER: Maybe being able to see the excitement on the guests' faces directly. Being able to be part of special occasions and cool moments in the restaurant, like somebody discovering something new about wine that they didn't know. Then we have to make that moment come alive for the folks in the kitchen. They need to be inspired by that as well.

Biggest disadvantage? When there's a problem, we have to handle it. There's nowhere to hide.

Most ridiculous thing that happens with regularity? The funniest thing that happens is when people come up to me at the podium and say, "I'm a friend of Gary Parker's, and he said I could have a table." My response is always "That Gary Parker is a good guy. Sometimes he overpromises, but he's a really good guy. Let me find you a spot." Stuff like that could drive you crazy if you let it, but you can't let it.

Top three things that all great restaurants have? An exciting room—whether it's sexy, whether it's rustic, there's something going on with the space itself. The staff needs to feel like they're having fun. And you can't skimp on the product that comes in the back door. You have to buy the very finest.

When you go out to eat, what's your philosophy in terms of tipping? I like to recognize somebody who wants to create a kind of moment for me and my guests. I want someone who's putting their heart into it, maybe taking a risk, recommending something that might not be the status quo. And then I like to tip accordingly, so that they know that table appreciated them putting a bit of themselves into the experience. I like that in a chef, too. That's one of the reasons why I adore Lydia Shire, because whenever you go to Scampo, you're going to experience something extraordinary that you weren't expecting.

Is there a cuisine you just don't eat? Maybe my mom's Irish cooking. That might be the only one I don't feel the need to return to. I grew up in a house where food was a requirement and just getting it out to the family was enough. No one tried to do much more. That said, though, my dad would buy oysters on the spur of the moment, and when I was like 6, we'd go down to the basement and shuck them and eat them.

"I want someone who's putting their heart into it, maybe taking a risk, recommending something that might not be the status quo."

How often do you introduce oysters to someone who's intimidated by them? Every night. When they're willing to trust you and sort of let go of their hang-up, that's something the staff will let the managers know. But my advice would be to go to a place that serves them with the highest level of integrity, and I would say we fall into that category, along with many others. Skip Bennett at Island Creek approaches growing oysters the same way a fine winemaker approaches growing grapes. And if you can align people's understanding with the romance of growing grapes, I think you have a bigger conversion rate.

Ever found a pearl in an oyster? Well, I was there when C.J. Husk [of Island Creek] found a pearl. He was shucking at Head of the Charles, and I was there with my daughter, who was probably 12 at the time. He shucked an oyster for her, and there was a pearl. He said it was only the second time he'd ever seen that.

Cocktail of choice? Probably a Negroni. I think it's absolutely perfect in that it's three ingredients in equal parts, and each on its own isn't all that appealing, but when you put them together, you get something transcendent.

Favorite restaurant in the world? Fore Street in Portland, Maine. I drive up once a year just to be in that room. If my restaurants are even a little bit like what it feels like to be in that room, we're accomplishing something.

Fantasy guest at one of your restaurants? I'd love to see a table with Thom Yorke from Radiohead, Julia Child (because she never got to see me out on my own) and maybe Bill Belichick.

Do you think you transformed Kenmore Square? Yes. I think we did. I think some big institutional forces laid the groundwork, like Boston University and the owners of the Red Sox, but I think my team actually helped it come to fruition.

Why'd you choose there? Honestly, it's probably because I'm not a born-and-raised Bostonian, so I wasn't walking around with this built-in disdain for Kenmore Square. When the opportunity presented itself, I looked on a map and said, "Wait. It's the gateway to the western suburbs. It's a quick shot over the river. It's in Fenway Park's backyard, and it's historic." So I signed up while all of my peers said, "No one's going to come to Kenmore Square to eat and drink." It was naivete on my part, but it worked to my advantage.

Now you're moving into Harvard Square. Why? It's a little bit of a play on my ego, because Jenny Johnson reached out and said, "There is a totally unique space, and there might not be any place like it in the country." I believe my team can figure out how to make it work.

So where will your empire end? Well, I think Boston has one of the most dynamic and vital restaurant scenes in the country, and when there's opportunity for the young people coming up through the ranks to land in an ownership position, when that's accomplished, I think I'll be done. ◆

Count these Chickens

Nine fried birds that turn the phrase "tastes like chicken" into high praise.

BY THE IMPROPER STAFF PHOTOS BY GARY TARDIFF & DIEGO NAVARRO

"We add a lot of fresh horseradish, so it has a lot of depth to it. And you have these bright flavors on top, which come from fresh herbs, red onions and scallions," says La Brasa chef Daniel Bojorquez.

La Brasa

La Brasa chef Daniel Bojorquez isn't really a veggie man. "I've always been the type of cook who likes protein and these sort of funky combinations," he says. That sort of unexpected marriage comes into play in his fried chicken wing, a dish that has been on the menu in various iterations since the Somerville boîte opened in 2014, returning to its original incarnation in this preparation with fresh horseradish, brown butter and, curiously, a snail vinaigrette. The recipe is actually a collaboration with his friend and fellow chef, Viale owner Greg Reeves, and speaks to Bojorquez's penchant for a unique flavor profile. "It has a very mixed flavor. It has a lot of umami with the soy and the brown butter, along with the snails. The brown butter really helps to bring the salt out, and the soy sauce really kind of mellows it out, but it's kind of salty and smoky."

The Smoke Shop

For Smoke Shop chef/owner Andy Husbands, fried chicken is the one non-barbecue item that must be on the menu at a barbecue restaurant: "You think Southern and barbecue, you think fried chicken." He uses his Sexy Gravy, made with roasted chicken stock and three types of chilies for a rich, smooth taste—"like a velvet blanket, just like George Costanza always wanted," he says. The gravy accompanies the chicken, which is brined in buttermilk, Frank's RedHot sauce and salt for three days before it's coated and fried to give it a crunchy exterior. It comes with a barbecue ranch dressing and your choice of two sides, but Husbands prefers collard greens and a slaw.

Loretta's Last Call

One word of advice: Don't attempt to take on this Fenway honky-tonk bar and restaurant's fried chicken sampler all by yourself. "Haven't seen it yet," says chef Art Welch. "Sounds like a competitive eating challenge!" Meant to serve four, the family-style platter offers three versions—Loretta's classic chicken, Nashville Hot and Erica's chicken, named for Loretta's general manager and marinated in buttermilk, garlic and spices. It's all served with housemade coleslaw, buttermilk biscuits and house-smoked andouille sausage mac and cheese. "Before we opened Loretta's we spent some time in Nashville ... trying lots of Southern food," Welch says. "Our goal was to be as authentic as possible."

Smoke Shop's ranch dressing sauce takes [illegible] and is inspired by a [illegible] mix of the two sauces.

"The andouille adds a nice touch of heat and smoke," Loretta's chef Art Welch says. "Think bacon added to mac and cheese, but on another level."

Fresh summer herbs from Allandale Farm are dried in-house for use in Cutty's secret spice blend.

Branch Line uses D'Artagnan's Green Circle chickens, which are fed exclusively veggies and raised on small Amish and Mennonite family farms.

Cutty's

Before they can get their hands on Cutty's fried chicken sandwich, diners must prove their dedication, lining up before doors open to grab a bite of the dish served just once a month on Super Cluckin' Sunday (save the date for the next one on Nov. 6). But the wait itself is half the fun. "It's a cool scene," says co-owner Rachel Kelsey. "In fact, it's so cool, my own mother loves to come and wait in line. She likes the energy of the crowd." Approximately 30 ingredients are used in each sandwich, from a secret blend of spices and herbs to the Bell & Evans chicken breasts that are brined overnight in tangy Kate's Real Buttermilk and seasonings. Once fried, the chicken finds its place inside a toasted Iggy's sesame brioche bun along with ranch dressing, barbecue sauce, onions and lettuce, plus the obligatory sides of housemade chips and seasonal hand pies.

Branch Line

Since Branch Line's opening last fall, its rotisserie chicken has been the roast of the town, due in no small part to chef Stephen Oxaal and company's thorough research for the signature dish. "We tried somewhere in the neighborhood of 200 different taste tests and subsequent recipes before we were all excited about what it is today," Oxaal explains. The final results: The bird is seasoned with a house spice blend, suspended in the refrigerator for two days, then dressed in butter and peppered with dried marjoram, thyme and oregano. "The recipe hasn't changed by one teaspoon since we opened," Oxaal says. But a few months after opening, co-owner Garrett Harker asked, "Is it possible to make a fried rotisserie chicken sandwich?" And how. The rotisserie breast marinates in buttermilk overnight before it's deep-fried to a crispy coating and topped with melted Caciocavallo cheese. That, lettuce and a slice of heirloom tomato are nestled between grilled ciabatta, which is spread with a bit of Aleppo chili aioli to finish it off with a touch of heat.

jm Curley

The fried chicken has been a mainstay on jm Curley's menu, but the supper dish has had many iterations through the years. The current take from chef Rhiannon Nowak comes with a housemade buttermilk biscuit that's good for sopping up the honey mustard and barbecue sauces as well as the horseradish-based coleslaw. The main attraction—chicken—stands out: It's soaked in buttermilk, dredged in a seasoned flour and tossed in Cajun seasoning, salt and pepper. "It seems only fitting that we pay homage to such a staple of the American diet," Nowak says, noting jm Curley's rep for serving comfort food with a twist. "It's definitely something worth coming in just to try."

jm Curley's barbecue sauce is slow-cooked and features green peppers, Worcestershire, ketchup and a few secret ingredients.

"The best part of the waffle is the crispy, caramelized outside," says Hopewell's Josh Davis.

Southern Kin Cookhouse

Bill Brodsky still remembers his first mouth-watering plate of chicken and waffles, served nearly two decades ago at an Alabama diner during a trip from Dallas to South Carolina. He's been experimenting with it ever since, landing his latest version at Southern Kin, one of the Boston Nightlife Ventures restaurants where he serves as culinary director. The chicken is brined, soaked in buttermilk and dredged in a light breading before it's pressure-fried. It sits atop a cheddar-chive buttermilk waffle and adds a burst of flavor from Fresno chili pepper-infused maple syrup and a housemade Louisiana honey hot sauce. "By adding some different complementary pops of flavor to the dish," Brodsky says, "it helps keep it interesting from start to finish."

Of the waffle batter, UNI executive chef Tony Messina says, "We usually add matcha to the mixture as well."

Hopewell Bar & Kitchen

Hopewell Bar & Kitchen ups the brunch ante with its Southern-style chicken and waffles, serving country-fried chicken wings atop a waffle made with doughnut batter—something the kitchen decided to try when experimenting with housemade doughnuts. "It seemed so obvious in retrospect," says Red Paint Hospitality Group executive chef Josh Davis. The treat complements wings that are cooked confit-style and rubbed with spices like cayenne pepper and paprika before getting covered to order in seasoned flour and fried until crispy. A side of housemade buttermilk ranch and a drizzle of maple Sriracha sauce round out the dish. "Fried chicken is sort of having a moment right now," Davis says, also noting Hopewell's buttermilk-fried chicken thigh sandwich, "so we adapted the concept to fit wings, and a new classic was born."

UNI

A Southern mainstay meets Eastern influences at UNI, where executive chef and partner Tony Messina brines the bird in kimchee and buttermilk for 12 hours before dredging it in a signature spice rub and frying it not once, but twice. "It's left to cool overnight and then refried, which makes the coating extra crispy," he notes. The tender morsel is served atop a waffle, which has a touch of nuttiness thanks to kinako flour. "It's certainly not like eating a teaspoon of peanut butter," Messina says, "but you do get a roasted bean flavor." Sancho peppercorn-infused maple syrup and a miso-Sriracha butter lend a spicy edge. If you can't take the heat, call out to the kitchen. Messina's suggestion? "At the end of the day, I don't think there's a much better combination than fried chicken and a cold beer."

Acquired Tastes

The history of Boston dining couldn't have been written without immigrants. Armenian-French chef M. Sanzian invented Boston cream pie at the Parker House hotel in 1856. German Jacob Wirth's eponymous restaurant dates back to 1868. Baker Francisco Santarpio (of Santarpio's Pizza fame) came to America from Italy in 1900. Joyce Chen, who opened her first Chinese restaurant in Cambridge in 1958, was from Beijing.

Today, Boston is a United Nations of restaurants where you can hear Japanese, Korean, Cantonese, Malay, Portuguese, Spanish, Italian, French, Arabic, Hebrew, Turkish, Farsi, Hindi, Thai and Vietnamese. Thanks to the city's immigrant restaurateurs and chefs, including the eight profiled here, the local melting pot bubbles deliciously. All Bostonians—wherever they were born—enjoy the gastronomic rewards.

LOIC LE GARREC

Petit Robert Bistro owner Loic Le Garrec was a French restaurant baby. "I was born and raised in Paris," he says. "My father was a baker and my mother owned a small brasserie, so I grew up in the profession. I dropped out of high school and went to culinary school."

Determined to perfect his English, Le Garrec came to the United States in 1997, landing jobs at L'Orangerie in Los Angeles and the renowned Le Cirque in New York. In 2000, he moved to Boston, his then-wife's hometown, to raise a family. After stints at Locke-Ober and Chatham Bars Inn on Cape Cod, in 2004, he became co-owner and CFO of Petit Robert Bistro, expanding to multiple locations. In 2015, he purchased the business.

"Authenticity is important," Le Garrec says. "Today, most people are knowledgeable about French cuisine—even the funny stuff, the frogs' legs and kidneys and brains, we like to eat. People are traveling more so they understand it better. It's always been a great motivation to represent French culture." Up next for Le Garrec: Frenchie, a casual wine bar opening in the South End by Thanksgiving.

GITA KANTROW

Nepalese-born chef Gita Kantrow—namesake of the new Gita at Wink & Nod—was raised in two culinary traditions. "I grew up in the Terai, a tropical area south of Kathmandu, closer to India than the city," she says. "I came to the U.S. in 1997 when I was 9. My dad was a trekking guide, and my adoptive mom had been to Nepal many times and connected with him to go on hiking trips. My biological parents always had the dream that one of their girls would come to the U.S. and have an American education."

Living in Lincoln, Massachusetts. Kantrow began customizing her adoptive mother's cooking to please her own palate, using ingredients and techniques she'd learned as a child. Her fascination with the kitchen continued through college and jobs at an Oregon design firm and an online medical startup in Boston. She opened a small catering company and began private cheffing. In August, she launched her six-month pop-up at Wink & Nod.

"My cooking is very personal," Kantrow says. "I work with Nepalese spices like cumin, turmeric and garam masala and herbs like thyme, rosemary and parsley. It's food that reminds me of home but also what I've known most of my adult life in the U.S."

MARIE-CLAUDE MENDY

Commodities trader by day, restaurateur by night Marie-Claude Mendy lived in Senegal, France and Britain before coming to the U.S. in 1996. "I have always been fascinated by the United States," she says, "the ideals, the opportunities, the mentality of 'Work hard and get rewarded.'"

A lifelong foodie—her aunt was a catering chef in Dakar, her mother a passionate cook—Mendy opened Teranga ("hospitality" in Wolof) in 2009. She wanted her adopted city to taste the cuisine of her native Senegal, a cuisine that delectably marries local and international influences with dishes like accara, black-eyed pea fritters, or thiébou djeun, herb-stuffed fish in tomato sauce with broken jasmine rice pilaf and braised vegetables—considered the national dish of Senegal.

"People come to Africa and live for a period of time—whether it's 10 years or 50 or a century—and when they leave, their flavors stay with us," she says. "In Senegal, the influences are European and Asian and, within the European community, Portuguese, French and Italian, Arabic and Jewish. Any person from those different backgrounds could come to a Senegalese meal and be comfortable eating it because they would recognize familiar elements. The uniquely Senegalese part comes in with the spices and the ingredients."

JOE THAILAND

He may have been born Banjong Yuvayongdee in Bangkok, but in Boston he's known to everyone as Joe Thailand, the affable restaurateur who's fed classic Thai dishes like satay, pad Thai and Massaman curry to thousands of hungry diners during the past three decades at House of Siam.

Thailand came to the U.S. in 1970 to study, choosing Boston because of its reputation for educational excellence and because Thai king Bhumibol Adulyadej was born here (at Mount Auburn Hospital in Cambridge in 1927). After graduating with a degree in Industrial Engineering from the Lowell Technological Institute, Thailand was approached by a chef friend to go into the restaurant business. It was 1985, and there were only a handful of Thai restaurants in the city. The chef left, but Thailand persisted—and prospered, opening a second location in the South End.

"I love this country and I love Boston," says Thailand, who jokes that his friends now call him Joe USA. "It was my dream to come here, to work here, to open a business here and become a U.S. citizen. That was my dream and it worked. It worked for me."

AZITA BINA-SEIBEL & BABAK BINA

When the Iranian revolution began in 1978, Azita Bina-Seibel and her sister were students in Boston unable to return home to Tehran. They were soon joined by their younger brother Babak and mother, Aghdas.

Partnering up with Babak, Azita turned her love of cooking into a family business that began with Italian trattoria Azita in 1990, then expanded to Persian restaurant Lala Rokh in 1995, followed by Bin 26 Enoteca in 2006, jm Curley in 2011 and Bogie's Place in 2013. Along the way, Babak Bina helped found the Taste of the South End and Taste of Beacon Hill fundraisers and created the nonprofit Bina Farm Center, in Lexington, which assists individuals with special needs.

Of all the restaurants, Lala Rokh holds a special place in the siblings' hearts. Many recipes come from their mother. "There was no recipe book," Bina-Seibel remembers. "I'd say, 'OK, Ma, let's cook this,' and she'd start cooking, and just before she'd put an ingredient in—a handful of this, a handful of that—I'd measure how much. We had to be consistent." Even today, when 83-year-old Aghdas Zoka-Bina visits her native Azerbaijan, she brings back ingredients for the Lala Rokh larder, like the dried lime used to season ghormeh sabzi, slow-stewed lamb and greens.

ANALIA VEROLO

How could Uruguayan architecture student Analia Verolo say no when, in 1993, an American foreign exchange student she dated in Montevideo sent her a ticket to join him in Maine? The relationship ended, but Verolo stayed on.

In 1998, she met aspiring chef Gabriel Bremer while the two were working at the Fore Street restaurant in Portland. The meeting began a personal and professional collaboration that resulted in Salts, the nationally acclaimed Cambridge eatery that opened in 2004 to rave reviews. But Salts closed after a flood in the winter of 2014; since then, the couple has been searching for a new location and enjoying baby Teo, born last October.

Later this year in Watertown, Verolo and Bremer will open La Bodega by Salts, a restaurant inspired by the foods of Juan Lacaze, Verolo's birthplace, across the Rio de la Plata river from Buenos Aires, Argentina. "We'll serve home-style, family food, like grandma used to make," she says. That means empanadas, lengua a la vinagreta (tongue) and chivito sandwiches (Dagwood-like subs of tenderloin, ham, mozzarella and hardboiled egg). Salts' much-beloved roasted, stuffed, boneless duck will also be on the menu.

DONATO FRATTAROLI

Donato Frattaroli is a member of a North End restaurant dynasty that dates back decades. His father, Arturo, a miller, moved from Sulmona, Abruzzo, to East Boston in 1969; wife Lucia and their four children followed a couple of years later. Frattaroli's two brothers had attended culinary school in Italy, so in 1974, the family scraped together the money to purchase a small Italian restaurant in Eastic. Then in 1977, they opened Lucia Ristorante on Hanover Street. During the next four decades, Lucia begat North End restaurants Filippo, Artu, Ducali, Ward 8 and seafood-focused newcomer Il Molo, which Frattaroli just opened with his own son, Donato Jr.

"Back then, there weren't even a dozen restaurants [in the North End], and now, probably in less than a mile and a half, you have about 150 licenses," says Frattaroli, a founder of the Taste of the North End benefit. "Back in the '70s, the food was more Italo-American, more comfort food—dishes that people would ordinarily cook in their houses every day. Today, it's more sophisticated. In the North End, people are trying to outdo each other and kick it up a notch with true Italian food. It's a great place to eat."

Have a Ball

A day of free arts events in Fenway.

THE FENWAY 'HOOD IS Sox country, sure. But what visitors and some locals might not know is that the home of the Green Monster is also a hotbed of cultural activity. The Fenway Alliance aims to raise awareness of that at its 15th annual Opening Our Doors Festival. The celebration of the Fenway Cultural District's arts and educational institutions—which include the Gardner Museum, the MFA, the Huntington Theatre Company, the Mary Baker Eddy Library and more—invites the community to enjoy a host of free experiences, from music, theater and dance to public art, historical tours and workshops. The daylong event will also feature kids' activities and food trucks, so bring the whole family out to Fenway for a day of immersive fun that (just this once) doesn't include peanuts or Cracker Jacks. / Alexandra Cavallo

The Opening Our Doors Festival kicks off at 11 am on Oct. 10 on the Christian Science Plaza, 201 Mass. Ave., Boston. Free. fenwayculture.org

PERFORMING ARTS

CRIMES OF PASSION

As the saying goes, love hurts. But the love of money? That can kill. Such is the case in A Gentleman's Guide to Love & Murder, a Tony Award-winning Broadway musical about Monty, the distant heir to a large family fortune who will do whatever it takes to inherit the dough. Stopping in Boston for a limited run on its first national tour, this comedic musical caper follows Monty as he juggles not one but two romantic interests as well as eight intended victims (played by a single actor undergoing a heroic number of costume changes). Catch the production some folks are dying to see when it hits the Shubert Theatre from Oct. 18-23. / Alexandra Cavallo

UNHOLY SPIRIT The local Talking Board Historical Society is dedicated to honoring the Ouija board, so it's fitting that the group will host a discussion before a screening of The Exorcist, the 1973 film about a 12-year-old who becomes possessed by an ancient demon after playing with the paranormal game. The now cult flick is so scary that paramedics were called to theaters to help stricken audience members, and so well-done that it was the first horror film nominated for Best Picture at the Academy Awards—and it has since inspired a just-debuted TV series on Fox starring Geena Davis. Exorcise your fears when the movie screens at the Coolidge Corner Theatre on Oct. 8. / Shivani Patel

Reviews by Brett Michel

The Birth of a Nation ★★1/2 Actor Nate Parker's debut film as a writer/director, an earnest, raw look at a slave uprising in the antebellum South, shares its name with D.W. Griffith's The Birth of a Nation, the unquestionably racist 1915 drama that posited the Ku Klux Klan as heroes and saviors of the Southern states. While Parker has reclaimed the title with noble intentions, his filmmaking prowess falls far short when compared with Griffith, who helped invent cinematic techniques that have been in use for the past century. From the blunt messages spelled out by the script he conceived with his college roommate, Jean McGianni Celestin, to his heavy-handed poetic flourishes and seemingly empty attempts at symbolism (while a unique visual, why does an ear of corn bleed?), Parker is in over his head—at least as a director. His acting, however, is as strong as ever. He stars as Nat Turner, a slave who was taught to read and write by his master's wife (Penelope Ann Miller), a choice that inevitably sets him toward the path of rebellion. Armed with a Bible, Turner is tasked with using scripture to keep fellow slaves in line, and it's righteous indignation that compels him to break free. Capturing the zeitgeist, Parker's film is urgent if unremarkable. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Fenway, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Don't Breathe ★★★ Known for the buckets of gore he unleashed in his Evil Dead remake in 2013, director Fede Alvarez has set his latest horror film in another enclosed space, but he's shifted his focus into suspense territory—and the results are thrilling. "Just because he's blind doesn't mean he's a fucking saint, bro," says burglar Money (It Follows' Daniel Zovatto) to his teenaged accomplice Alex (Goosebumps' Dylan Minnette), who's reluctantly entered a life of crime because of his puppy-dog devotion to Money's girlfriend and fellow accomplice, Rocky (Evil Dead's Jane Levy), who's trying to find a way out of Detroit. Money has discovered that their sightless old mark (Avatar's Stephen Lang) is sitting on a pile of cash in his expansive home on an empty street, but what he doesn't know is that their intended victim is a military vet who's more than capable of violently turning the tables on the would-be thieves, vision or no. And lest you think this is just a recipe for some mindless fun, the setup also serves as a sly commentary on how the economically depressed can turn on each other to survive a system that's rigged against them. Expertly crafted, if occasionally over the top, this is one of the best home-invasion thrillers since 1967's Wait Until Dark. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Hell or High Water ★★★1/2 Director David Mackenzie's crime drama may be set in modern-day Texas, but it's a classic Western through and through, full of moral grays and another towering performance by the gray-maned Jeff Bridges. He's back in Rooster Cogburn mode as a smarter-than-he-sounds Texas ranger, Marcus Hamilton, a jut-jawed good ol' boy who's equally at home chasing bank robbers as he is hurling racial slurs at his half-Comanche, half-Mexican partner, who loves the old coot anyway. Speaking of those bank robbers, they're a pair of desperate brothers: Tanner Howard (Ben Foster), a gun-happy career criminal who's recently been released from prison, and his younger, smarter brother, Toby (a revelatory Chris Pine), a divorced dad who's always walked the straight and narrow. But when the Howards face losing the land that's been in their family for generations, Toby works out a rather brilliant plan: They'll only rob the registers at each branch of the bank that's threatening to take everything from them. Stealing just a few thousand from each location keeps their crime spree out of federal jurisdiction, so if Hamilton can't catch them, they may just save the family's land after all, paying for it with money taken from the very company that's about to foreclose. Taylor Sheridan's screenplay also robs rather liberally from Cormac McCarthy's work, and it's even better than his script for last year's Sicario. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

The Light Between Oceans ★★ Director Derek Cianfrance's last film, 2012's The Place Beyond the Pines, felt too novelistic, even though it was an original screenplay, overcooked by Cianfrance with co-writers Ben Coccio and Darius Marder. His latest, which he actually adapted from a novel (a 2012 best-seller by M.L. Stedman), suffers from too many movie cliches. But where these pictures struggle the most is in their shared use of an ambitious device that fails in both cases: a dramatic shift midway through that introduces new characters and forces you to rethink the story you've been watching unfold. In the case of The Light Between Oceans—which takes its title from the lighthouse on a small windswept isle off the coast of Western Australia that serves as the setting—there's a dreamy romance that fills the first half, until a twist of fate fractures the picturesque marriage we've just seen develop between Isabel Graysmark and World War I vet Tom Sherbourne (real-life couple Alicia Vikander and Michael Fassbender) once Hannah Roennfeldt (Rachel Weisz) enters the mix. Sumptuously shot by Australian cinematographer Adam Arkapaw, it's beautiful to gaze upon, but ultimately barren. (In the suburbs.)

The Magnificent Seven ★★★ When John Sturges directed 1960's The Magnificent Seven, it was already not-so-original, a Westernized version of Seven Samurai, Akira Kurosawa's 1954 masterpiece, itself a Japanese reconfiguring of American Western tropes. Hell, even Pixar's second film, 1998's A Bug's Life, is a variation on the same story—shorn of most of the death. Fret not, though. While the movie's PG-13 rating may not portend a bloodbath, director Antoine Fuqua's latest restores the basic tale's high body count. Fuqua reunites Denzel Washington and Ethan Hawke, co-stars of his 2001 crime drama, Training Day. Although a strong presence, Washington won't win another Oscar for his work here as Sam Chisolm, a "duly sworn warrant officer" who feels just a tad out of place, given that he's a black man hunting white criminals in 1879. OK, so the multicultural cast (Chris Pratt, Byung-hun Lee and Manuel Garcia-Rulfo among them) that composes the band of outlaws, bounty hunters, gamblers and hired guns that Sam assembles to protect a small town from a robber baron (Peter Sarsgaard) may be historically ridiculous, but it's the new wrinkle that co-writers Richard Wenk (Fuqua's The Equalizer) and Nic Pizzolatto (polarizing creator of HBO's True Detective) bring to this nevertheless entertaining spin on an old yarn, frayed though it is. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Miss Peregrine's Home for Peculiar Children ★★ A little bit late to the literary party, Tim Burton has finally directed a movie based on a young adult property, tackling the first of Ransom Riggs' Peculiar Children books. On paper, the novel may have seemed like a good match for the filmmaker's sensibilities, but even though the production has been impeccably designed, playfully incorporating Burton's interest in the gothic and off-center, there's an unfortunate lack of character to the peculiar children onscreen, beginning with Jake Portman (Ender's Game's Asa Butterfield), a boy who can see invisible monsters. His journey introduces him to other "peculiars," from Enoch O'Conner (Finlay MacMillan)—a boy who uses the hearts of tiny animals to breathe life into inanimate objects (allowing Burton to indulge his stop-motion interests)—to Emma Bloom (Ella Purnell), a girl who's lighter than air and would float away if not for her lead shoes. But then, she'd also float away with Jake's heart, repeating history that transpired some 70 years before with Jake's grandfather (Terence Stamp). How is this possible? It all has to do with a convoluted, Groundhog Day-like time-travel gimmick known as a "loop," which is controlled by Miss Peregrine (Eva Green from Burton's Dark Shadows, his latest muse), who also has the ability to transform into a bird. If this all sounds like too much for one film, it is. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Queen of Katwe ★★★ After their modest success with 2014's Million Dollar Arm, Disney is back with another inspirational sports drama set in a foreign land. And although both are based on true stories, this tale of a young girl from rural Uganda who pursues her dream of becoming a chess champion doesn't rely on the trope of a white American who makes it possible, as John Hamm's character did in the former film when he traveled to India to tap cricket players who might excel at playing baseball. Instead, director Mira Nair (Monsoon Wedding) allows her film to be an East African story through and through, utilizing the native tongues of English and Swahili. As soccer player-turned-missionary Robert Katende (Selma's David Oyelowo) begins teaching strategic thinking and risk-taking to underprivileged youths through the game of chess, he recognizes the potential in 10-year-old Phiona Mutesi (luminous newcomer Madina Nalwanga), encouraging her to compete on a higher level. Alas, Phiona's mother (Lupita Nyong'o, an Oscar winner for 12 Years a Slave) would rather her daughter be more practical and sell corn to help keep a roof over their heads. OK, so William Wheeler's script (based on the book by Tim Crothers) isn't exactly breaking much new ground, but the winning performances greatly elevate this familiar story. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Snowden ★★ Oliver Stone has a terrific new film out, and it's only 1-minute long. It's a clear and concise public service announcement that manages to be both prescient and playful, and it plays before his new feature, which may also be prescient, but is far from playful during its punishing 134 minutes. Say what you will about the crackpot conspiracy theories espoused in 1991's JFK, but that film featured Stone working at the peak of his powers, aided by experimental cinematography and flamboyant editing, both of which were recognized with Oscars. There was an enormous energy to that film—a chronicle of the Kennedy assassination that questioned the official story—and it's almost wholly missing from this unexpectedly dull look at Edward Snowden and his journey from flag-waving patriot to controversial whistleblower and wanted man. Snowden's story is familiar from wildly divergent news coverage, along with Laura Poitras' nonfiction film from 2014, Citizenfour, and Stone and his co-screenwriter, Kieran Fitzgerald, recreate the making of that Oscar-winning documentary, with Melissa Leo playing Poitras, holed up in a Hong Kong hotel room with Joseph Gordon-Levitt's Snowden as she trains her camera on him and we watch his life unfold from 2004 to 2013. They're both terrific actors, but here they're as stagnant as the ugly-looking, linear film that constrains them. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Suicide Squad ★1/2 I hope you liked that extraneous scene that stopped Batman v Superman: Dawn of Justice cold, the one where Wonder Woman pauses in front of her computer to watch fan-service video clips that introduced the Flash, Cyborg and Aquaman, because the first reel of writer/director David Ayer's Suicide Squad—which promised to be DC Comics' big-screen equivalent to The Dirty Dozen—is dedicated to introducing us to "the worst of the worst." Amanda Waller (Viola Davis), the ethics-free, bureaucratic head of a secret government agency, flips through a dossier over dinner; one by one, we see photos of the antiheroes she'll eventually bring together as flashes of their backstories are shown, accompanied by a "hip" collection of licensed songs that's been carefully curated to sell soundtrack tie-ins. Sadly, Waller turns out to be much more intimidating than the supervillains she assembles, from "world's deadliest assassin" Deadshot (played with not-so-deadly snark by Will Smith) to Harley Quinn (Margot Robbie, covered in sex appeal and little else), one-time shrink and current girlfriend of the Joker. Speaking of, if you're coming to this film based on the promise of seeing Jared Leto's tatted, grill-toothed take on the Clown Prince of Crime, you're in for a letdown. Barely appearing, he's about as frightening as DC's latest unfocused misfire is entertaining. (In the suburbs.)

Sully ★★★ Nearly every time a film starring Tom Hanks comes along, critics make the observation that the actor is "the new Jimmy Stewart." But isn't it about time that we recognize the two-time Oscar winner for who he really is? If we're lucky enough to ever see another actor come along with this kind of charisma and career, perhaps the best compliment we might pay this hypothetical performer will be to refer to him as "the new Tom Hanks." But for now, we have the real thing, a man at the top of his profession in the fourth decade of his career, giving one of his best performances while working for another legend for the first time. That legend is Clint Eastwood, an 86-year-old actor who has carved out a significant second career as director, making another in a string of biographies of real-life figures. His latest subject? Chesley "Sully" Sullenberger, an airline pilot known for saving the lives of 155 people in the "Miracle on the Hudson." This dramatized account shows us the forced landing from different points of view in each of the film's three acts, but it's during the rescue effort, when hundreds of New Yorkers mobilize to save every last passenger, that you may shed a tear; it's here that Eastwood displays the best of humanity, moored by Hanks' dialed-back performance. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

War Dogs ★1/2 Todd Phillips, director of the Hangover trilogy, attempts to make a legitimate film with War Dogs—or at least, he tries to be the next David O. Russell. By this, I mean he's made his own American Hustle, which had Russell in full faux-Scorsese mode. Here, Phillips, his team of writers and editor Jeff Groth have stolen wholesale from 1990's Goodfellas and 2013's The Wolf of Wall Street in adapting Guy Lawson's 2011 Rolling Stone article. Hell, they've even cast The Wolf of Wall Street's Supporting Actor Oscar nominee, Jonah Hill, as one of their two leads. Truth be told, he's the best thing in the movie, delivering lines like "I only sell to one gun nut: the U.S. military," as his morally reprehensible character, Efraim Diveroli, recruits his childhood friend, David Packouz (Miles Teller), to be his partner as they luck into a career as high-powered arms dealers. Packouz is positioned as this tale's Henry Hill, narrating the action whenever Phillips stops it with yet another freeze frame—but the former massage therapist never learns his lesson. Phillips and company can't commit to his downfall, instead tacking on a fictional epilogue befitting this entire phony enterprise. (In the suburbs.)

WHERE THE HEART IS

If lines like "Nothin' is as it has been and I miss your face like hell" pull a little tighter at the heartstrings when the Head and the Heart take the stage on tour behind September's Signs of Light, it's for good reason. The tight-knit Seattle folk outfit will be down one integral member: co-frontman Josiah Johnson, whose soaring vocals are at the heart of fan favorites like "Rivers and Roads." Founding member Johnson is on hiatus from touring to recover from a struggle with addiction—a battle that also required him to step away from recording the group's third album halfway through production. As their first album with a major label, Signs of Light is markedly more produced, with the sextet polishing their signature bucolic, acoustic sound while maintaining the buoyancy that underlines their exuberant live shows. Show the band some love when they drop by the Orpheum on Oct. 18. / Alexandra Cavallo

Edited by Sarah Hagman

SATELLITE VIEWS When the moon hit Greg Mort's eye through a neighbor's telescope at age 13, it was instant amore. He spent that summer camping out behind his house for nocturnal drawing sessions; now he's an artist who's created commissions for NASA and works like this wittily named 2013 watercolor, Space Aged—For the Crater Gouda. It lands at the Peabody Essex Museum on Oct. 15 as part of Lunar Attraction, an exhibit featuring nearly 60 other paintings, sculptures, photos, books and pieces of jewelry inspired by the celestial muse. Visitors can also check out a restored version of one of the first sci-fi flicks, French director Georges Méliès' 1902 A Trip to the Moon, get up close with Apollo memorabilia and moon rocks, and perhaps be pleasantly surprised at their body weight with a stop at a scale calibrated to the weaker gravity found 239,000 miles away. Don't miss the total eclipse of the art, on display through Sept. 4, 2017. / Sarah Hagman

RE-ENTRY'S A BITCH

Like the swallows on St. Joseph's Day at San Juan Capistrano, Boston's power chicks returning from their summer haunts gathered for From Fenway to the Runway, the luncheon and fashion show starring the Red Sox wives, held at the Hotel Commonwealth and proudly sponsored by The Improper Bostonian.

A benefit for the Red Sox Foundation, the inaugural Ladies Who Lunch gathering of the season had pretty much perfect attendance, in no small part because the afternoon honored local treasure Tiffany Ortiz. Present and accounted for: first lady of Red Sox Nation Linda Pizzuti Henry and her sisters, Laura Pizzuti-Gamache and Tina Pizzuti Brzezenski, gorgeous Hollywood transplant Eliza Dushku, fashion plate Tonya Chen Mezrich, emerging superpower Emily Kumler Kaplan, fashionista Remy Schaefer Stressenger, the dizzyingly beautiful Maggie Gold Seelig, dining doyenne Kathy Sidell, silver fox Bryan Rafanelli, the flawless Julie Hume Gordon, yummy mummy Amy Belkin, the luminous Luba Azevedo, retail deity Matt Dunphy, delightful do-gooder Saskia Epstein, the retina-burningly beautiful Sara Underwood, philanthropic powerhouse Patty Ribakoff, Chestnut Hill chatelaine Nancy Adams, smoking-hot emcee Liz Brunner, red-hot mama Julie Joyal, Big Papi David Ortiz, assorted other athletes and a woman who responded to a compliment on her dress by saying, "My house is under construction and I can't find anything, so it was the perfect excuse to go to Bergdorf's."

The fashions by Bloomingdale's had everyone salivating, as did the gazpacho and scallops, while the auction raised shovelfuls of shekels. Meanwhile, the afternoon's best comment went to the woman who said, "Don't you dare judge me for drinking at lunch. I need pinot grigio to deal with the end of rosé season."

BLAME IT ON THE 02657

In the design community, fall's official back-to-school party is New England Home's 5 Under 40 event, honoring a hand-picked group of young whippersnappers who are making their names known throughout the Northeast. Hosted by high-end rug dealer Landry & Arcari, the evening is a fundraiser for Barakat, a Cambridge-based education and literacy program for women and children in South Asia, and it draws the crème de la crème, in addition to those rising to the top, in architecture, interior design and landscape design.

There to applaud honorees Ben Uyeda, Caleb Johnson, Jayme Kennerknecht, John Haven, and Paul and Esther Halferty were such major players as interior design avatars Ken Dietz and Steven Favreau, Daher Interior Design CFO Jennifer Pond, restaurateur extraordinaire Steve DiFillippo, the dapper Austin Pike, silver fox Cheryl Savit, host Jerry Arcari, architect extraordinaire Alan Mayer, smoldering Uzbek Nodir Abdullaev, jewelry designer Rebecca Scott, PR czars Tony Fusco and Robert Four, legendary landscape architect Keith LeBlanc, numerous bearded hipsters, several women with severe hair and/or shoes, and the expected number of eager young things too good-looking for their own good.

Then there were the surprising number of men wearing plaid, which prompted one guest to say, "When did interior designers all start dressing like lumberjacks?"

Each of the honorees designed a one-of-a-kind rug that was auctioned off by the impossibly beautiful Jenny Johnson, and those not bidding kibitzed about this and that while the bartenders poured enough pinot grigio to float a barge.

The evening's best comment came from the designer who said, "So far, I've seen two vendors I've been trying to get in touch with for weeks. Apparently, email and cellphones don't exist in Provincetown." ◆

WEDDED BLISS

BEING MARRIED TO A JOB ISN'T usually a good thing. But it's pretty sweet for the subjects of Carley D. Thornell's feature story, a look at six local couples who work together to help others get hitched, from a pair of musicians who've rocked hundreds of receptions to a design duo who create custom wedding bands from 45,000-year-old wood and other unusual materials. Elsewhere, Lydia Santangelo treks to Maine's Hidden Pond for a fashion shoot of styles for brides and grooms, and Jonathan Soroff travels to a private island in the Caribbean that'd make a perfect honeymoon hideaway. Meanwhile, Meghan Kavanaugh checks in with a local techie who took a scientific approach to wedding planning, creating a space-inspired guide to help other couples keep the dreaded 'Zillas at bay. Of course, if something doesn't go according to plan, you can always call Elton Crespo, a local pro who's dealt with every wedding dress disaster imaginable; Sarah Hagman takes a closer look at the tools of his trade. All this wedding stuff too lovey-dovey for you? Just turn to Alexandra Cavallo's Q&A with Fran Lebowitz for a restorative dose of cynicism. Happy reading.

MEET THE DESIGNER BEHIND A DIY GUIDE TO PLANNING AN OUT-OF-THIS-WORLD WEDDING.

A Stellar Idea

Stacey Dyer wasn't what the wedding industry would describe as a traditional bride—she hadn't spent her childhood dreaming of her big day, she shied away from pastels and glitter, and she wanted her groom to have an equal part in the process. So instead of relying on industry intel, she forged her own path using the same skills that help her as a local UX designer for websites and apps. "The only way I survived was by using stuff in software design," Dyer says. Now she's sharing that wisdom with other couples in the throes of wedding planning as the creator of AstroWed: The Universe's Most Kickass Wedding Planning Workbook, a comedic space-themed guide with a color palette and illustrations inspired by visual research Dyer conducted during a visit to NASA's Kennedy Space Center.

The gender-neutral, LGBTQ-friendly workbook may be fun—couples designate planets in their Priority Galaxy and work together to fight off 'Zillas—but it's also a practical guide to project management that aims to help users identify potential problems in advance. "All the stress comes from unexpected surprises in the negative way," Dyer says, noting that the book begins with a look at the science behind why we stress. And for those who don't even know where to start, there are color-coded timelines, checklists and even a color scheme laboratory informed by Dyer's background in graphic design.

> "If you think of it like you're planning one big awesome party, you'll be a little bit more like, 'OK, my shoulders can go back. The Zen will come.' "

More than 150 couples have already used AstroWed to plan their weddings, a number expected to grow as new offerings roll out in the coming months. Free non-traditional wedding planning workshops covering decision making, budgets, family expectations and wedding expos kick off on Nov. 2. A "DIY Wedding Décor + More" blog series will also debut in November, and a Top 10 Wedding Decisions podcast is in production. For Dyer, it's all about helping couples have some fun before the celebration, not just on the big day. "If you think of it like you're planning one big awesome party, you'll be a little bit more like, 'OK, my shoulders can go back. The Zen will come.' " / Meghan Kavanaugh

LISTEN UP!

Stacey Dyer shared a few more of her wedding planning tips

On the biggest mistake couples make: "From a fundamental perspective, it's that this day is going to be perfect, that every ounce of it is going to be perfect. It's not. Shit's going to go wrong! Things are going to happen, but if you can get ahead of them by thinking before, then you'll be far more at ease and ready."

On catering to the crowd: "[My husband and I] were going to curate all these playlists...and then we sat down and were like, 'None of this music is for us. The only music that's for us is the music we picked to walk down the aisle and dance to.' Once we realized that, we got on the phone with the DJ and were like, 'Dude, just do your thing. Play the hits, don't play these five songs, call it a day.' "

On remembering what's important: "The day is so that you can marry the person that you love. Regardless of religion, regardless of whatever else you've got going on in your life, celebrate you two and this party that you're having to bring people together."

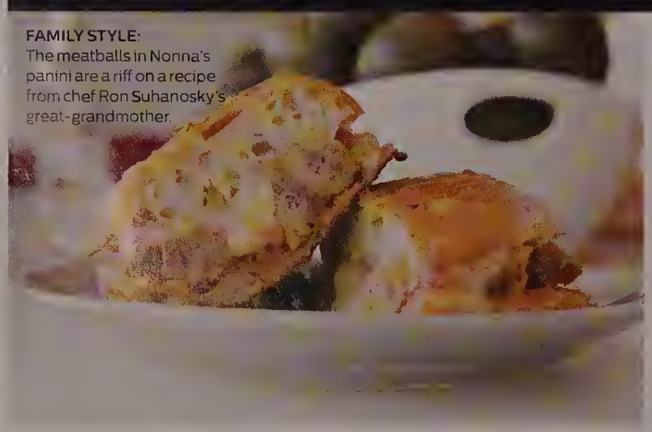
FAR EAST VIA THE WEST

A SAN FRANCISCO CHEF BRINGS JAPANESE FARE TO BOSTON'S MILLENNIUM TOWER.

PABU Boston
Millennium Tower, 3 Fronklin St., Boston (857-327-7228) pobuizakoya.com

AS AN OUTSIDER SETTING UP SHOP IN Boston, Michael Mina knew it might be tough to gain a foothold in the market. And so while the San Francisco-based chef prepared to open a Boston outpost of PABU in Millennium Tower, he sought out a couple of old friends: Ken Oringer and Ming Tsai, who worked at Silks in San Francisco in the '90s while Oringer's then-girlfriend worked at Mina's AQUA nearby.

"I think Ken and Ming coming from San Francisco was kind of a big eye-opener.... I picked their brain a lot," Mina says. "When we built PABU, we said there's a few cities where this feels right in, and Boston is one of those spots. Product plays a big role in that, and being near the coast I think really helped."



When PABU Boston opens on Nov. 1, the kitchen will be helmed by executive chef Ben Steigers, who worked in PABU San Francisco, one of Mina's nearly 30 restaurants worldwide. PABU's offerings will run the gamut from Mina's modern Japanese style to chef/partner Ken Tominaga's more traditional Japanese cuisine. There are izakaya-style small plates as well as a steak program that includes Japanese and American meat alongside Japanese-driven side dishes. A robata grill will turn out skewers of meat such as chicken hearts, Wagyu, pork belly and other rotating options. Then there's the sushi program. Tominaga schooled Steigers on how to run a proper sushi bar during their time together in San Francisco, and Tominaga's voice still echoes in his mind.

"One thing Ken's famously quoted for is: 'It's pretty good, but it's not Japanese,'" Steigers says. "He wants you to be able to look at the dish and say: 'OK, I can see Japan there.' Especially with the sushi, where we're trying to move away from using crazy sauces, mayos and things like that."

On the beverage side, sake will be the king of the bar, with sake master sommelier Stuart Morris helping to craft a list of by-the-glass varieties as well as bottles ranging from 330 milliliters to 1.5 liters, including some sakes from Japanese breweries sold exclusively to Mina's restaurants. The physical bar stretches nearly the length of the lounge, with Hollywood-style booths opposite it and lanterns hanging from the ceiling and walls. A more formal dining room holds 64 as well as a 15-seat sushi bar, while a private dining area has room for 20.

Mina expects to begin lunch service after Thanksgiving, and a "happy hour" from 3 pm till 6 pm will launch a week after opening. He's hoping that being in one of the city's most buzzed-about new buildings will help lure some customers as well.

"There's positives to being in a building like this, but it's also about making sure we break down the barriers a little bit and are able to let people see it for different reasons," Mina says. "You hope that you're creating something and building relationships with your guests, so they want to come back."

FAMILY STYLE: The meatballs in Nonna's panini are a riff on a recipe from chef Ron Suhanosky's great-grandmother.

Good Eats: On the Ball

There's just one table in chef Ron Suhanosky's cozy 400-square-foot pop-up at the Street—one that, at 105 years old, bears marks from years of his great-grandmother's cooking. "She's the driving force for why I am a chef," says the James Beard Award winner. She's also the source of many recipes for the Italian cafe. Open through the end of the year, it serves coffee, baked goods and sandwiches like Nonna's meatball panini. Suhanosky swaps the original beef/pork mix for balls of beef and wild boar that are roasted, braised and joined by fresh ricotta, grated Parmesan, garlic and pepperoncini between two slices of perfectly toasted ciabatta. Nonna would be proud. / Meghan Kavanaugh

Out of THE VAULT

25 YEARS

The Improper is celebrating its 25th anniversary in 2016, and to properly mark the occasion, we've been digging through the archives for gems from issues past. Behold some past nuptial nuggets, from wedding guest gaffes to surviving a tornado (no, not in the form of a bridezilla on the rampage).

Feb. 5, 1992

Bostonians are nothing if not romantics. In this edition of Woman on the Street, our reporter polled passers-by about the most romantic thing they'd ever done. Said Burnis, 40: "I got a divorce."

12 YEARS AGO

Feb. 4, 2004

You think you've got some crummy friends and relatives? In this 2004 wedding feature, "How to Deal: A Guide for Brides," we tapped local bridal experts and recently betrothed locals for tips on surviving the big day—along with some horror stories. Like this one, from Newton's Lynne Schaffer, married September 2003: "One of our guests brought a portable TV into the reception, so he could watch the football game at dinner. Thankfully, he was considerate enough to wear a headset."

May 18, 2005

Speaking of horror stories, humor columnist Ezra Dyer ran through some "Worst-Case Wedding Scenarios" for our 2005 Bridal Issue, offering handy solutions to wedding day disasters. For example: "Scenario: A tornado touches down near the function hall, jeopardizing the success of the only fun part of a wedding: the reception. Solution: Round up all attractive bridesmaids and female guests and as much beer as can be carried. Head down to the basement and make a rousing speech about civilization starting anew, right here. Claim that you're against polygamy but are willing to modify your value system for the good of mankind..."

FRAN(K) TALK: For Lebowitz's thoughts on 20-somethings, Trump, what sucks about Boston and more, visit improper.com

EVERYTHING IS TERRIBLE

Author, speaker and social satirist Fran Lebowitz is known for her whip-smart commentary on all that is terrible and worthy of her disdain in the zeitgeist. At age 65, the longtime New Yorker is more plugged in than your average Millennial—despite never having owned a cellphone (she despises them). We got Lebowitz on the line to get her thoughts on everything from Kim Kardashian to the art (or lack thereof) of emojis before her stop in town at New Repertory Theatre for a conversation with WGBH executive arts editor Jared Bowen on Oct. 24. / Alexondro Covollo

WHAT'S A CURRENT HOT POP CULTURE TOPIC YOU FIND PARTICULARLY ANNOYING? This is an awful thing to say, but when I heard that Kim Kardashian had gotten robbed, I giggled. [Laughs.] I know it's not a human response, I understand that, but I can't imagine I'm the only person who had that response. Stop. Showing. Off. That doesn't exist anymore, that phrase. You never hear about showing off anymore, used in a derogatory way, or used at all. Because now, people are just "expressing themselves."

SOCIAL MEDIA HAS HAD THAT EFFECT... Truthfully, before any of this stuff was even invented—social life was never real. ... A lot of it comes from court life; not that you'd recognize it as such now. And that is artificial. You're never completely yourself when you're with other people—whoever that self may be. What's new is that people seem to think of themselves as some sort of product...for moss consumption.

I'LL GIVE YOU A POP CULTURE TOPIC AND YOU GIVE ME YOUR THOUGHTS. OK: JUSTIN BIEBER. What do I think of him? Well, it's simple, I've never thought of him.

EMOJIS... Here's an example of something I know of, but I've never seen—except printed, like in magazines and newspapers. But I have, actually, a strong feeling about them, which is that these are hieroglyphics. This is not progress. This is going backward thousands and thousands of years. [Raises voice] Progress was the alphabet! They're very blunt, which is the opposite of the alphabet. They seem to me to be very confining. I understand you can make them up, but it would probably be easier, and definitely more interesting, to think of some new words.

LENA DUNHAM... I only saw the first three episodes of Girls. ... If I was still a girl, I would probably have liked it. But I'll tell you this: I like the idea of Lena Dunham a lot.

HARAMBE THE GORILLA AND THE SUBSEQUENT MEME, "DICKS OUT FOR HARAMBE"... So the gorilla's dead, right? Is this some sort of attempt to bring the gorilla back to life? ... It's hard for me to understand who has this kind of time on their hands. There must be some other idiotic thing you can be doing with your time.

SNAPCHAT... Is Snapchat different from Instagram? I'm not sure which, but I did one of them for Vonity Foir. They ran them every day for a month, one a day, and they were like 15 seconds long. I never saw them, but I know that they're very popular because when that thing was on I could hardly get in or out of the subway station.

Drink of the Moment
KOMBUCHA COLLINS

PRICE: $13.50

INGREDIENTS: Letherbee gin, rhubarb, lemon, turmeric-ginger kombucha

FOR THE DRINKER: Who's a trendsetter. "It's one of those drinks where one person will order it, and the others will make fun of them—and then the second round is three Kombucha Collins," says Beat Brasserie beverage manager Nate Hayden, who suggests it as a daytime cocktail or a first order at an early evening meal.

BEAT BRASSERIE
13 Brattle St., Cambridge
(617-499-0001)
beatbrasserie.com

FLAVOR PROFILE: "It's a nice combination that I think catches people off guard," Hayden says. A rhubarb-based herbal liqueur adds some complexity to the otherwise light sip, built around a "pretty mellow" gin. More of a spirit-forward kind of person? "It does still have that depth to it, but it's not going to knock you off your feet." As for the kombucha, don't let the Gwyneth go-to scare you off. "The first time I had kombucha, I decided I was never going to have it again," Hayden admits. Here, however, "It's interesting to get tartness from a different angle."

DRINK TO YOUR HEALTH: Recalling the slight vinegar bite of pre-Prohibition shrubs, the kombucha comes from Vermont-based company Aqua ViTea and stars turmeric, hailed in recent headlines as a cure-all spice and seen popping up in everything from lattes to face masks. "It's sort of bitter and pungent, which aren't the most appealing words," Hayden says, "but they're words we use in cocktails all the time."

PAIR IT WITH: The Life Bowl ($14.50), grains packed with beets, carrots, asparagus and other veggies, all drizzled with a soy-ginger vinaigrette.

THE NEXT ROUND: For another refreshing option, try the Something Natural ($12), made with cilantro and cucumber mint vodka. / Soroh Hogmon

A FIRST LADY'S LOVE

AN INTIMATE LOOK AT HOW AN INTERVIEW ON THE CAMPAIGN TRAIL LED TO A LIFE-CHANGING RELATIONSHIP

Eleanor and Hick* by Susan Quinn
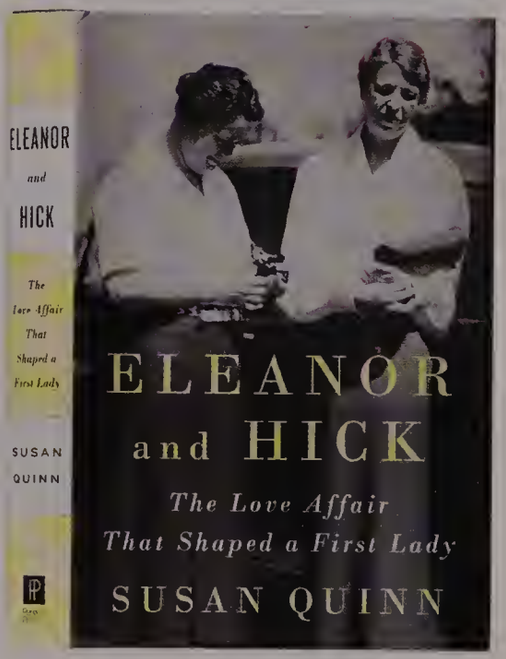
Published by Penguin Press, 416 pages, $30

As first lady, Eleanor Roosevelt fiercely promoted the liberal ideas of the president's New Deal, but it's less well-known that she did so in intimate connection with Lorena "Hick" Hickok, an AP journalist. Working together closely, the two women also shared a deep love, exchanging more than 3,000 letters, which prove a rich source for Brookline author Susan Quinn in this fascinating look at their relationship.



Raised in a troubled family under very different circumstances from the high-born Eleanor, the feisty Hick chronicled the sufferings of the poor during the Depression. Eleanor was often alongside her. The pair drove everywhere in Eleanor's roadster, twining political missions with homey affection. Home became the White House, where Hick had her own room and lived, on and off, for 13 years.

Quinn deems it a love affair, with cuddling and tickling, possibly more. Hick was gay; Eleanor was less inclined to physical affection, even with her children. FDR, after an affair, slept in his own room, and this triangle involved both wariness and real respect. After all, Hick's reports for the Works Progress Administration filtered significantly into FDR's programs.

However powerful her influence, though, Hick was not first lady, and she suffered exclusions and money problems. But in Quinn's engaging rendering—which spans a significant swath of history, including World War II—Hick is an ebullient character full of bold brilliance, one who encouraged her iconic friend to write the "My Day" column that reached millions.

From Page 115: "Hick dearest," Eleanor wrote afterward, "it seems years since we sat and read and read and were alone together. I loved every minute and I am going to live on it during these next few weeks."

Hick wrote Eleanor, "I had a little ache when I unpacked my briefcase and realized that I was in the cottage at Warm Springs, with you, when I packed it early this morning." ◆

Although the beaches have sand that's as soft as a baby's bottom, the coral reef ringing the island comes close to shore, and swim shoes are highly recommended.

PETIT PLEASURES

PETIT ST. VINCENT OFFERS A SECLUDED SANCTUARY FOR THE WELL-HEELED CASTAWAY.

"Private island in the Caribbean." They're quite possibly the five sweetest words in the English language, and Petit St. Vincent, in the Grenadines, certainly doesn't disappoint. Located 40 miles south of St. Vincent, the low-key luxury resort comprises 115 acres dotted with 22 rustic yet elegant cottages, surrounded by nearly two miles of beach.

PSV, as it's locally known, first opened as a resort in 1968, and throughout the '70s and '80s it was a not-so-well-kept secret among the cognoscenti, until being eclipsed somewhat by islands like St. Barts and Mustique. However, under new owners, who have poured millions into renovations and improvements, PSV has been restored to its former glory. In 2013, it gained inclusion into the elite portfolio of Small Luxury Hotels of the World, and it now regularly appears on "Top 10" lists of the most desirable island resorts.

Getting there is a bit of a challenge. The best option from Boston is JetBlue's direct flight to Barbados, followed by an hourlong puddle jump to Union Island and a 20-minute boat to the Promised Land. But each step of the journey acts as a mini decompression chamber. By the time you've arrived at your one- or two-bedroom cottage—assembled from native stone and purpleheart hardwood, elevated on a lush hillside or set mere steps from the enticingly azure sea—you're already in island mode.

The common areas at PSV consist of the Beach Bar and the Main Pavilion. Goatie's Bar, at the former, is a place to sip a rum drink, toes in the sand, in the shade of a thatched roof flanked by almond and palm trees. A selection of tapas, Mediterranean fare and flatbreads from the on-site clay pizza oven offer sustenance, as does the view of yachts bobbing in the channel. The Main Pavilion, meanwhile, offers a more formal dining experience, with both indoor and outdoor seating, perched high on a hill, surrounded by frangipani and hibiscus and overlooking the leeward harbor. With a wine cellar boasting upward of 3,000 bottles, there's a selection to satisfy the most demanding oenophile, while the chef creates prix fixe three-course meals that would please the fussiest gourmand. During lobster season (Nov. 1-April 31), guests can feast on all-you-can-eat lobster free of charge. Throughout the day, they also have the option to choose a romantic spot anywhere on the island to dine, whether it's a picnic lunch or a candlelit dinner in a thatched hut on stilts over the water.

PSV welcomes the owners, guests and crews of the yachts that moor in its harbor, but only to its restaurants, spa and boutique. Beaches and the rest of the island, marked by signs saying "Zone Privé," guarantee seclusion and serenity. That leaves 16 palapas carved into the maho- and palm-fringed beach to be claimed on a first-come, first-served basis. Each palapa boasts a hammock, two chaise lounges and a table for dining or card games, and they're private enough that anyone averse to bathing suits can sunbathe au naturel with impunity.

For those looking to keep active, the island has a hiking trail and two beachside yoga pavilions, and all non-motorized water activities—snorkeling, kayaking, stand-up paddleboarding, windsurfing and Sunfish or Hobie Cat sailing—are complimentary. But the dive center is where PSV really excels. Owned and operated by Jean-Michel Cousteau and colleague Don Santee, it delivers the expertise expected from the former's famous pedigree and can arrange scuba excursions to the nearby Tobago Cays Marine Park. The less ambitious can confine their aerobic activity to the short walk up to the blissfully charming Hillside Spa, a Balinese-style oasis manned by Indonesian therapists who can work their magic on the most knotted muscles in open-air treatment rooms.

PSV isn't for everyone. There are no phones, no TVs, and Wi-Fi service is available only near the main office. (The cottages do have air-conditioning, but most of the year, the trade winds gently do the trick and allow for the lapping waves to serve as guests' lullaby.) The cottages' bathrooms have curtains in place of doors, and guests alert staff of their wants with a signature driftwood flagpole system. But it's precisely this upscale Robinson Crusoe vibe—with its lack of 21st-century distractions—that makes it an ideal place to unplug and recharge. A staff-to-guest ratio of more than two-to-one means that when a yellow flag is hoisted to request something, it's delivered promptly. And when you raise a red flag as a "Do not disturb" sign, you have an island paradise all to yourself. ◆

GOLD COAST

WAYPOINT DRAGS THE VAUNTED ALDEN & HARLOW SENSIBILITY TOWARD THE SHORELINE.

Follow the Boston dining scene long enough, and you accumulate stories about current star chefs: "I remember her when she was just a sous-chef; now she's got a restaurant empire." It's fun to be able to say, "Remember how I've been going on about that chef for years?" One such is Michael Scelfo, whom we've been talking up since before the Tom Brady era right up to the 2014 debut of his Harvard Square smash Alden & Harlow. Scelfo just opened Waypoint, his second restaurant, and it takes many of Alden's virtues—inventiveness, a love of rich, umami-soaked flavors, meticulous local sourcing—and applies them to a more seafood-centric menu, with mostly ravishing results.

That starts with raw bar centered on the expected assortment of New England oysters ($3 each on our visit), here served with pickled fennel mignonette. A special of Washington state's Hama Hama oysters ($4 each) is prettily composed, dotted with delicate orange fish roe, microgreens and a fine dice of apples, recalling chef de cuisine Pierce Boalt Juckett's prior work at Select Oyster Bar. Smoked and salted peel-and-eat shrimp ($18) offer a goodly pile of fat, ruddy prawns, a bit messy to eat, their insistent smoke given cool counterpoint by thickened buttermilk. A daily crudo ($18 on our visit) echoes the oyster special, a few slices of pristine fish—on one night, the superb local species tautog, which gains a pink tinge and shrimp-like flavor from its crustacean-heavy diet—barely marinated in citrus and oil and dotted with luscious black caviar: delicate and perfect.

Pizza appears in the form of chewy, medium-crust pies featuring Scelfo's fondness for odd toppings like duck tongue and smoked whitefish. Fans of New Haven apizza will want to sample the chopped clam ($16), a white-sauce pie densely topped with clams, parsley, plenty of salty pecorino and hot pickled peppers. House-milled flour also appears in generous bowls of pasta, like a surpassingly deep-flavored emmer casarecci ($16) that generates an umami wallop with fermented parsnips, maitake mushrooms and nutritional yeast in brown butter and hazelnuts. A fierce, borderline over-the-top saltiness characterizes uni bucatini ($18), again with that ferocious pecorino, the funky delight of shaved bottarga and the creamy smack of sea urchin, topped with an almost-firm smoked egg yolk.

Composed plates offer the most beautiful platings and subtle flavors here, as in grilled monkfish cheek ($15), three delicate filets atop a swirl of squid-ink-blackened eggplant puree, a kohlrabi salsa verde bringing fine acid balance and crunch, Sicilian capers lending a subtle flowery note. Wood-roasted char belly ($15) is a superb skin-on chunk of the firm, well-marbled, wild alternative to salmon atop pureed chickpeas, gently sweet grilled green grapes, crisp-fried chickpeas and a verdant spray of pea greens. Two fried offerings fall a little short, as when the clam flavor of corn and clam cakes ($8) gets lost in a hush-puppy-like envelope and a dip of bacon-fat mayo. I'd never met a plate of fried smelts ($13) I didn't love, but Waypoint's version, which butterflies the tiny fish, yields a chewy, dry, flavorless result. Raw and roasted apple salad ($13) full of papery radish slices repeats an old Alden motif of taking a light vegetarian foundation and weighing it down with a fierce, meaty accent, in this case boquerones (lightly vinegar-pickled fresh anchovies).

Big roasts (listed as serving two to three, more likely to stagger a table of six) serve as a lovely nap-inducing coda to the preceding smaller shareable plates, as in a fabulous, tall, cylindrical chunk of Maine lamb shoulder ($64), which a fork can break into a mound of fatty, tender shreds, sitting on a base of plump white marrow beans and anchovies. They're dramatic and festive enough to add a celebratory holiday-dinner note to a big meal.

Bar manager Seth Freidus brings the same crafty wit and culinary accents he introduced at Alden & Harlow to original cocktails like the Estate Grown ($14), which gives a nutty, Tiki-ish hit of pistachio falernum to a blend of rhum agricole, lime and herbs. The Looking Glass ($12) could serve as a boozy dessert: a noggy whole-egg flip with white rum, spice syrup, absinthe and the bitter thwack of Sibilla amaro. I'm not sure why absinthe is still a thing—it had a moment 10 years ago after a long U.S. ban had been lifted—but Waypoint is all over it with 20 bottlings served with traditional accoutrements of water, sugar and 19th-century pomp. Fifteen nice-priced wines by the glass ($10-$15) and another 60-plus in bottles ($35-$175, most under $75) seem like a food-friendlier bet, along with a short, tight list of mostly local beers ($5-$12).

The cavernous dining room (145 seats, including 25 at the bar) boasts driftwood planks overhead, Edison-bulb pendant lights, cool old neon beach-shack signs on the walls and a gleaming open kitchen. It's loud enough to feel lively without crossing into punishing noise levels, and service is well-schooled and nimble on the menu's intricate sourcing. In the end, Waypoint feels less like a giant evolutionary leap for Scelfo than a modest, logical skip-and-a-jump from Alden toward the riches of New England's seacoast. That's a welcome addition for this once-desolate stretch of Mass. Ave., for Cambridge and for Greater Boston. ◆

HIGH NOTES

HIGHLIGHTS FROM HIGH SOCIETY

➜ The Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its season on Sept. 24 with an all-Russian program that included a performance by acclaimed Chinese pianist Lang Lang, who later joined music director Andris Nelsons in mingling with the 540 benefactors. Chef Patrick Campbell of Café ArtScience prepared the three-course meal, and after-dinner cordials were served onstage. The evening raised $1.5 million.

➜ Boston Landmarks Orchestra hosted its 15th anniversary gala at the Mandarin Oriental on Oct. 1 to celebrate music director Christopher Wilkins, who has been at the podium for five years, and former U.S. Ambassador Swanee Hunt, whose late husband, Charles Ansbacher, founded the orchestra. The 250 partygoers got in on the action, conducting orchestra members during the event's cocktail hour and raising more than $300,000.

ASK CHERYL

Q: I HAVE ACNE SCARS ON MY CHEEKS. MY GIRLFRIEND SAID SHE USED TO HAVE ACNE SCARS, BUT HAD THEM REMOVED WITH FRACTIONAL LASER TREATMENTS. CAN YOU TELL ME ABOUT THAT?

A: Yes, fractional laser is an extremely effective way of reducing and/or eliminating acne scars, as well as other types of scars elsewhere on the body. Energy pulses from this specialized fractional laser break down and destroy scar tissue, activating new cell growth. Fresh, healthy skin replaces the scar tissue.

Fractional laser has other uses as well. It can also successfully remove stretch marks from pregnancy or changes in your weight. Melasma, which is a discoloration of the skin, can be treated with fractional laser treatments; and it is also very helpful for softening or eliminating fine lines and wrinkles.

At SkinHealth we have years of experience with fractional laser and would love to have you come in for a consultation.

THE ACCOUNTANT ★½
Starring Ben Affleck, Anna Kendrick, Jon Bernthal, J.K. Simmons, John Lithgow, Cynthia Addai-Robinson, Robert C. Treveiler, Mary Kraft, Alison Wright, Seth Lee, Jake Presley, Izzy Fenech and Jeffrey Tambor. Directed by Gavin O'Connor. Written by Bill Dubuque. At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

IN THE RED

AFFLECK'S ACCOUNTANT OFFERS A POOR RETURN ON YOUR INVESTMENT.

WHEN YOU LOOK AT THE CAST LIST for The Accountant, which includes two Oscar winners (star Ben Affleck and J.K. Simmons) and two Oscar nominees (John Lithgow and Anna Kendrick), it sets up expectations that director Gavin O'Connor's ridiculous yet flat crime drama never once meets during its bloated 128-minute running time.

Affleck plays Christian Wolff, the titular accountant. Perhaps it's his Asperger's syndrome that makes him so great with numbers. But it's his upbringing as a Army brat (played in flashbacks to his youth by Seth Lee) under the militaristic rule of his borderline abusive father (Robert C. Treveiler) that has made him just as good with a gun. After all, watching a plastic action hero like Affleck simply tapping on a calculator for more than two hours would be pretty boring, right? Screenwriter Bill Dubuque seems to think so; he may as well have titled his script The Assassin, since the ratio of number-crunching to bone-crunching would look pretty stark on a spreadsheet.

But then, O'Connor's film might get confused with Hsiao-Hsien Hou's lyrical masterpiece from last year, also named The Assassin. Well, to anyone lacking a brain, that is. But for those poor thinking souls unfortunate enough to end up in a theater showing The Accountant, be aware that you might be more entertained spending time with your accountant.

Inexplicably, Dubuque's script was very highly regarded in Hollywood, having earned a spot on 2011's Black List, a compilation of top-rated unproduced screenplays. And something must have attracted Affleck, Simmons, Lithgow and Kendrick to this project, after all. Still, this only serves to support the theory that no one reads anymore—and that includes recent Emmy winner Jeffrey Tambor (Transparent) and rising star Jon Bernthal (The Walking Dead), who appears here as a second assassin, but presumably one without a sideline as an accountant. Alas, a world filled with bookkeeping killers might actually be interesting.

Instead, Dubuque has cooked up a sloppily conceived parallel plot focusing on Marybeth Medina (Cynthia Addai-Robinson), a poorly vetted Treasury Department analyst with a secret past—a past that her boss, Crime Enforcement Division director Raymond King (Simmons), is threatening to expose if she doesn't do his bidding and track down the "black money" operator who's been cooking the books of some of the world's worst men. Naturally, she'll come to discover that this man is none other than Christian Wolff. And if you think Christian's lupine surname seems a bit overwritten, know that it's just one of a number of aliases he uses in this equally overwritten film, which finds Wolff un-cooking the books at an advanced robotics company run by genius Lamar Black (Lithgow) after junior accounting clerk Dana Cummings (Kendrick) discovers a multimillion-dollar discrepancy.

You'll guess who's behind the embezzling scheme, though neither Wolff nor Cummings can—perhaps because they're blinded from making goo-goo eyes at one another. Their tunnel vision continues when Wolff saves Cummings' life after she's been targeted for Knowing Too Much, quickly dispatching some hitmen who've been hired to terminate her. He may be socially awkward, but she sure finds him sexy when he's smashing her would-be killers' skulls against her bathroom walls. Ah, modern romance.

As the two go on the run, they're pursued by Bernthal's shadowy assassin, Medina and King, who has a secret history of his own. But not to worry—we'll soon find out what it is during one of the comically frequent flashbacks that fill in the desperately uninteresting backstory.

O'Connor, a journeyman who's never quite matched the success of his first hit, Olympic hockey drama Miracle, treats these events with a deadly seriousness that ironically undercuts any sense of drama that might invest you in such an absurd potboiler. It's interesting to wonder what Affleck—who's built a nice second career as a director—might have done with this same script, having navigated his way around a pair of Boston-based thrillers (2007's Gone Baby Gone and 2010's The Town), along with a surprise Best Picture winner (2012's Argo). Say what you will about his acting, but the former Cantabrigian knows how to pace a film and set a tone, two elements that are woefully mismanaged here. Instead, we're left with a mess of a movie that could have used a little levity. It's this lack of self-awareness that's the real killer here. ◆

Music / Paul Robicheau

LION-HEARTED

BRITISH LIVE FAVORITES TURN ESOTERIC INFLUENCES INTO VISCERAL ROCK

At home in England, Foals command prime festival spots and headline arenas with their aggressive and atmospheric amalgam of punk and dance rock, having earned the title "Best Act in the World Today" at the 2015 Q Awards. As with many other groups from the U.K., however, that cachet doesn't entirely translate to this country, where Foals play smaller venues, including the House of Blues on Nov. 1.

Bassist/singer Walter Gervers doesn't mind the change. "We enjoy the sweatier, up-close-and-personal shows just as much as the big festival slots," Gervers says. "At some of those [festivals], you feel a little far away from the crowd."

For one thing, larger settings can make it more difficult for singer/guitarist Yannis Philippakis to leap into crowds, which he's even done from balconies. "Once that happens a few times on a tour, then the crowd expects it, like 'Oh, when's he going to do his balcony jump?' And that's a bit of a shame, because some nights he feels like it's not right," Gervers says. "But he still likes to get down and into the crowd, because that's how we started, getting face-to-face with people."

Indeed, the decade-old group—rounded out by guitarist Jimmy Smith, drummer Jack Bevan and keyboardist Edwin Congreave—first played house parties in the same college town of Oxford as Radiohead, but with roots in post-hardcore and math rock.

"Yannis and Jack used to be in a very heavy instrumental band with wacky time signatures, and stuff at the time was kicking against a lot of other music, a lot of other Britpop," says Gervers, 32. "The influence of American bands was exciting to us... all this stuff like Shellac and Fugazi that seemed so punk and exciting, and there were very few people in England that were trying their take on it."

"We enjoy the sweatier, up-close-and-personal shows just as much as the big festival slots."

In Foals' case, the results developed into rhythmic swirls that can evoke the Cure, Bloc Party or the Rapture, while interlocking guitars and percussion nod to more esoteric inspirations like Afrobeat and the minimalist composer Steve Reich. "That kind of repetitive, polyrhythmic stuff," Gervers says. "[Yannis] said 'Let's be a band like the Rapture but try to play a Steve Reich part'... That sounds like a nightmare and things could get complicated and sound a bit wanky, but you can do very simple, driving 4/4 [time] and disco beats and allow the guitars to play."

Reich's rigidity in structure appealed to the members of Foals, Gervers says. "You can't stray from the parts. Everything's got to be in its right place or the rhythm doesn't work." It's a formula that fuels the cyclical guitar lines in "Mountains at My Gates" and ping-pong polyrhythms in "Albatross" on Foals' fourth album, What Went Down, released here in August. The quintet still writes around guitar loops laid down by Smith and Philippakis. "It's such an easy way to write parts in the early stages," Gervers says, "and you don't need [loops] anymore when all of a sudden you're playing the song."

On most of What Went Down, produced by James Ford (Florence + the Machine, Arctic Monkeys), Foals adopt a more accessible, streamlined approach. Yet the album's title track erupts as the group's most visceral song to date.

"I buried my heart in a hole in the ground, with the lights and the roses and the cowards downtown," Philippakis howls over an ominous synth chord before a walloping beat locks in, building to a thick, pulverizing chorus where he roars "When I see a man, I see a lion!"

One listen to "What Went Down" could tempt anyone to experience that title song in concert. "When we're writing, because our live career is so important to us, we think about how something like 'What Went Down' is going to work live—and it's going to be a moment in the set and [fans] need that sort of injection of energy and heaviness," Gervers says. "It makes us grin really, because we can't believe sometimes that we can get away with it."

It can also propel Philippakis into the crowd. ◆

SMALL TALK

YOU HAVE TO WATCH OUT FOR WHAT COMES OUT OF THE MOUTHS OF BABES.

IT SEEMS LIKE EVERYBODY'S MAD AT YAHOO and the NSA for spying and/or revealing personal information and secrets. Not me. Go ahead, read my email! I guarantee you'll be disappointed, just like I am. Here's a real example of an incoming message from the past 24 hours, which bore the subject line "How to have a perfect period." It read, "Ladies, if there is a way to make that time of the month more pleasant, you know you want it! We've compiled a list of must-have products to make your period just another day in paradise!" Have I mentioned that publicists often assume I'm a woman? I mean, yeah, I enjoy scented candles and I take bubble baths and I'd be excited for an ER reboot and, OK, I guess I understand why they'd think that.

Anyway, if you're worried about a constant stream of untimely revelations, the NSA has nothing on kids. Mine are now 4 and 6, an age range when they're walking voice memos, repeating whatever they hear. My wife, Heather, and I basically live like organized crime bosses or citizens of an oppressive regime—you always assume that you're under surveillance. Want to discuss your checking account balance or the prescription cream for your rash? Better go in the bathroom, turn on the faucet and speak in code. "Hey, how does the red fern grow? And how many apples are in the basket?" Otherwise you'll be dropping your kid off at school the next day, and as he walks away you'll hear him cheerfully inform the nearest adult, "My dad has $200 and a rash on his butt!"

Incidentally, when a kid asks how much money you have, you should always say you have $200. They're definitely going to repeat whatever you say, so you want a number that you can spin. And $200 could be either a lot or a little depending on the context, so it allows you to control the storyline. When your kid tells the cashier at the grocery store that you have $200, you can say, "Yeah, I wish!" And when your kid tells some other parent that you have $200, you can say, "Oh no, gonna be a little short on the rent this month!" A corollary here is to never tell a kid what anything actually costs, because then your pint-size Freedom of Information Act will chat up complete strangers to tell them how much you paid for your car, your house, your haircut and your prescription butt-rash cream.

A friend of mine said that having twin daughters was like living with a pair of small vaudevillians, but in my case it's more like living with insult comics. It's not that they're trying to be mean, but they basically have no internal monologue—if a thought occurs to them, it's getting shared, probably at high volume. For instance, we have a neighbor who evidently hasn't bought a new pair of athletic shorts since 1983, when men's sportswear embraced a hemline popularized by Miss Daisy Duke. He also wears really long T-shirts. This unfortunate sartorial combo makes for a disconcerting image when you walk around the corner and see him out doing yard work. You think to yourself, "Gee, somebody should tell that guy that he looks like he's not wearing any pants." Then your 4-year-old, suddenly summoning the lung capacity of an Olympic swimmer or Tour de France cyclist, bellows, "Daddy, why is that guy in his underwear?" At that point, you've just got to own it. Smile and shrug, as if to say, "Kids! They tell you what you probably actually needed to hear!"

If you're worried about a constant stream of untimely revelations, the NSA has nothing on kids.

Toward the end of the summer, we took our kids to New York so they could visit the Intrepid museum, see the lights of Times Square and find new people to offend. Walking through Manhattan was a nonstop exercise in damage control. Within minutes of setting foot in the city, Heather told our younger son to stay close because "bad people will try to take you." To which he jovially pointed at the nearest weirdo—a greasy-haired, strung-out-looking dude about 10 feet away—and yelled, "You mean like that guy?" Well, yes. Sorry, sir. But you do have that look. Later that night, I was waiting outside a Duane Reade with our older son when a woman walked past wearing a burqa. "Look!" he screamed. "A ninja!" I quietly explained that she was not a ninja and asked him to please not yell that again. I did, however, acknowledge that it would be super cool if there were ninjas just walking around.

The next verbal battle, I can already tell, will be against myself. Because I swear. A lot. And when you hear your own kids swear, when you hear that bilious profanity tumble forth in an innocent, cherubic voice, well... it's really hilarious. But I'm still going to nip it in the bud. I'm telling them that if they swear, then I'm writing them out of my will. And then they'll be out $200. ◆

SENSE OF HUMOR

THE COMEDIAN OPINES ON LARRY DAVID, THE DING HO AND GETTING STIFFED BY THE LEATHER CLUB.

THREE-TIME EMMY WINNER JACK GALLAGHER, 63, IS best known for his recurring role as a doctor on Curb Your Enthusiasm. Born in Fall River, he was raised in West Bridgewater and attended Providence College and UMass before pursuing a stand-up career during the nascent days of Boston's comedy scene. After moving to L.A., he became a regular at the Improvisation and had a lead role in the cult classic Shakes the Clown. He appeared in Heartbreak Ridge with Clint Eastwood and starred in the short-lived ABC sitcom Bringing Up Jack. On PBS, he hosted the series Money Moves, Off Limits and Kids, Cash and Common Sense. More recently, he has been touring with his one-man show, A Different Kind of Cool, based on his experience as the parent of a son with autism. He will be performing in Boston at A Million Laughs for Literacy, a benefit for the National Braille Press on Oct. 28. He lives in Sacramento.

JONATHAN SOROFF: Where did you get the financial expertise to do the shows for PBS?

JACK GALLAGHER: I don't have any financial expertise. I'm eye candy. The person I work with is a financial expert. Here's the deal: I can really read the teleprompter.

What did your parents say when you told them you were going to be a comedian? "Jesus Christ! No!" My parents couldn't believe it, mostly because I was such a shy kid, not terribly social. My father is this Irish Catholic guy from Rhode Island who thinks the only thing you should do in the morning is pick up your lunchbox and go to work and shut up. When we came home from our summer jobs and he'd ask how work was, we'd say, "It sucked." He'd say, "Did you have to lick anything?" We'd say no, and he'd say, "Then it was a good day. Shut up."

How'd you support yourself starting out? Well, I taught school for a while. I taught at the Landmark School, a boarding school on the North Shore, and my wife and I were actually house parents the first year and a half we were married. We lived in a dorm with 68 teenaged boys. When they found out I was doing stand-up, they were like, "What? He's a prick! He's not funny."

Is Larry David a genius? Yes. And a good guy and fun to work with, because he trusts people who he thinks are funny. As opposed to other shows I've done, where you read the script and think, "Oh, I can beat this joke," and they're like, "Just read what's on the page, please." Larry is open to other ideas.

Favorite venue for stand-up? I do very few club dates. I do more corporate events or public speaking. That's probably 70 percent of what I do now. My youngest son is a person with autism, and I talk to groups about living with someone who's different and accepting differences in people. But back in the day, my favorite venue to do stand-up was the Ding Ho [the legendary Chinese restaurant in Cambridge]. It's one of those things where you don't realize how much you miss it until you can't do it anymore. That was a ball.

Were you part of that generation of comics like Denis Leary? I was. Absolutely. Barry Crimmins, Steven Wright, Lenny Clarke, Steve Sweeney, Kevin Meaney, Mike McDonald. All those guys. We all played the Ding Ho, Stitches, Play It Again Sam's... Those were great times.

Favorite memory of those days? One of the things that was so cool about that time was it was a really supportive environment. We all hung out after everyone went home. Late night at the Ding Ho was like a clubhouse. Barry Crimmins and Steven Wright are still two of my best friends.

How about the late-night talk shows? I was on Carson a couple of times. That was my favorite moment of my career. Leno was great, too, but the show didn't have the same cachet after Carson left. But I did Dennis Miller, Arsenio Hall...the only one I didn't do was Letterman. But doing Carson? That was like winning the lottery.

Why do you think so many big comedians come from Boston? That's a really good question. I don't really know. There's definitely an attitude in Massachusetts of "Nobody's gonna fuck with me." And if you can't protect yourself with your fists, you protect yourself with your humor. They don't call us Massholes for nothing, and a lot of guys protected themselves with their humor. I know I did. In high school, I didn't want to spend a lot of my time getting shoved into lockers.

Who do people mistake you for? My wife calls me a "major minor celebrity." I get mistaken for somebody who's on the news, I guess because I have gray hair. Last time I looked, that PBS show was in 165 markets, so I'll see people at airports, and they look at me strangely. Then there's the always annoying "How do I know you?" How the hell am I supposed to know? Do you know me? I don't know!

"If you can't protect yourself with your fists, you protect yourself with your humor. They don't call us Massholes for nothing."

Shakes the Clown*: unfairly overlooked by the Academy? Well, I believe it was The Boston Globe that called it "the Citizen Kane of alcoholic clown movies." Can't get better than that.

Worst job you ever had? I worked in Bridgewater at the Independent Nail factory. I was a nail galvanizer. You take nails hot from the kiln and then dip them into bubbling hot zinc to galvanize them. It's very dangerous, because nails come out of the kiln at around 250 degrees, and zinc boils at over 600 degrees. So if you didn't lower them in at exactly the right pace, they would blow up. It was scary.

Worst stand-up job? Paul Barclay [the local club owner] got me a gig with the Boston Leather Club. It was all guys who worked in leather. It was their annual dinner, and they didn't like me. My first joke was "Oh, I was expecting this to be a lotta guys with leather hoods and zippers across their mouths." When I was done, the guy refused to pay me.

Three things everyone should know about autism? There's a quote by a doctor named Strong: "If you've met one person with autism, you've met one person with autism." They're all not the same. They're all not Rain Man.... And all I know is my son. My son Liam has never told me a lie. He's truthful to a fault. My son is one of the most thoughtful, kindest people I know. If everybody was more like Liam, we'd be in a much better place. And the only other thing I'd say is that my son is not autistic. He's a person with autism. There's a huge difference. Autism does not define who he is. ◆

MEET SIX LOCAL COUPLES WHO ARE HAPPILY WEDDED TO THEIR WORK

Petal Power

It's easy to assume that Yianni Stapleton would be hard-pressed to find a good gift for Bety after spending all day with her at Stapleton Floral Design—but it turns out their mutual passion never gets old. "I actually bring flowers home to my wife, especially when it's unusual or new for the season," says Yianni, who has shops in the Seaport and South Boston. "Celebrating an occasion may involve a restaurant, but a beautiful bouquet with a bottle of pink champagne is still her favorite."

The bubbly was a-flowin' when they got married in 1988—she with 25 guests and he with 250 guests as part of their "beautiful big fat Greek wedding," he explains. Their biggest disagreement was on the cake; Yianni wanted a "monster" confection complete with bridges, the wedding party in miniature on said bridges and the bride and groom in the center. Bety's classic style of design won out, but it was all for the better: "We had a simple, beautiful three-tiered cake with my bride and groom on top," he says. "We've always compromised in both our personal life and business, and it's worked out for the best."

Though balancing the two isn't exactly a piece of cake, they've made indelible memories during the past three decades in business. Those include brushes with fame, like arranging flowers for the Hatfields & McCoys miniseries and the Ted 2 wedding. But real-life weddings deliver the truly special scenes. One bride came to them 26 years after Stapleton served as her mother's wedding florist; the daughter carried her mom's bible down the aisle in style with a modern silk jacket adorned with brocade, ribbons, rhinestones and flowers. For another wedding, the Stapletons managed to find rare black bacarra roses at the last minute for a desperate bride. They arrange them every year for the groom, who still comes in for his annual anniversary bouquet.

Perfect Harmony

With a band name like Eye2Eye, it's no surprise Larry Jackson and Penni Layne are on the same page musically and professionally. They started performing together nearly 20 years ago as members of that act; now they manage Eye2Eye along with five other bands as the owners of Upside Entertainment. But their success is about far more than the songs, Larry says.

"You've got to make couples feel special and loved and listened to. We're going to do everything we can do to make your event great," Larry says, emphasizing that, as in any relationship, establishing a foundation of trust is key. "Clients try to choose every song they want the band to play, and that ends up a lot of times tying the hands of the bandleader from doing what they do best—knowing which songs to pick and where to put them at to make a great five-hour party."

He and Penni should know, after all—they've attended an estimated 2,000 weddings and functions. Their own wedding took place only a year ago. Several musician friends performed at their celebration, and Larry crooned "The Way You Look Tonight" to Penni (though he lovingly credits her as the more "natural vocalist").

It's a talent she now gets to hone in their soul and R&B band, Penni Layne & the Wonder Boys, which performs original tunes and cover songs. Mirroring their roles as parents to a blended family with three kids, their careers are now more about mentorship. Leah Randazzo, a vocalist in Upside's band Protégé, says she learned from the best: "They are both really sweet and fun and know more about the wedding industry than anyone I know!"

Sweet on Each Other

A 20-hour road trip can make or break a relationship... so just imagine trying to do that and transport a life-sized Darth Vader cake from Massachusetts to Florida. Such is life for Amanda and Tyler Oakleaf of Oakleaf Cakes Bake Shop, whose business has grown from a two-person operation based out of their apartment to a Symphony Hall storefront with a slew of like-minded artistic employees.

"I could never do this without his help; we make a great team," Amanda says of her spouse of more than a decade. "Sculptural details like fondant doesn't want to hang that high without ripping, and he's more on the engineering side and marketing side—the real brains behind that cake and creating my website. I'm more on the decorating, baking and creative side."

Their location helps bring in a mix of employees from her alma mater, nearby MassArt, and from Berklee, where he studied music engineering. The result is a mini family of illustrators, art historians and pastry chefs.

"Everybody has the same background, so we get along really well—sometimes too well! We have the same nerdy obsessions with comics and superheroes. We nerd out on the cakes as much as customers."

The only thing Amanda would change? "If I got married now, I wouldn't have a cake. By now we just do pies or ice cream for our birthdays!"

Putting a Ring on It

Scott and Minter Richter don't mind taking work home with them—on many nights, tales from their custom ring business, Minter + Richter Designs, fuel dinner table conversation with their two sons. "Telling them all of the fun and exciting love stories I've heard all day is my favorite part of the day," Minter says. "Scott always smiles, laughs and says the same thing: 'We are all snowflakes.' ... Each love story is dramatically different from the next. You may see rings on our website, but I see people and stories."

Minter works at the "front of the house," consulting with brides and grooms. Scott then translates her notes and sketches into handcrafted bands at his studio at South Boston's Distillery building, using titanium inlaid with unique materials like concrete and water buffalo horn. Scott integrated a thin blue line into rings for a pair of police officers, while a couple who met on a beach in Hawaii incorporated sand and an inlay of koa wood into their design.

The Richters' own love story began with a friendship, first forged in 1988 when she moved to Boston and got a job at the store Scott managed for his uncle. Nearly 10 years later, they reconnected for a co-worker reunion. "I fell head over heels for an old friend," Minter says. "Not far from our 20th anniversary, I can't imagine life without him."

Minter says having their own company was meant to be since they worked together from the beginning—and because family-owned businesses run in the family. "We both come from parents who worked together. Somewhere in the back of each of our minds, I think we thought, 'Of course we'll work together! We always have!' "

If The Shoe Fits

Sure, Ron Davis has gotten down on bended knee before thousands of women—but he's only ever proposed to one. As co-owners of Natick's Shoes to Dye For, he and his wife Lisa have helped outfit countless brides and bridesmaids with comfortable yet chic footwear and accessories, although it's often him suggesting fingertip- or cathedral-length veils and kitten heels while Lisa takes the lead on the paperwork side of things.

"People have all different types of relationships—it's really just what works for you," Ron says about what he's learned working with couples over the years, including unconventional brides who bring in their grooms for a sneak peek.

The couple's own Cinderella moment came 27 years ago, when they met at an anniversary party. They soon discovered that each other's family histories in the shoe industry went back three generations, and they even went shoe shopping during their first date. Ron jokes that he knew Lisa was The One when he found out she was a sample size 6.

Today, with their 17-year-old daughter Mandy helping out at the store, there's another generation involved, though her twin brother Josh "only stops by when he wants a free lunch," Ron jokes. Customers are more likely to meet the Davises' 6-year-old Havanese named Fenway, who, Ron says, "has his own fan club." And although the industry has changed over the years, he still loves the art of matching just the right shade of champagne to a gown—and carrying on a tradition. "Bridal shoes used to be part of every family shoe business, but it's really become a competitive, niche market now, and there are fewer and fewer stores like this," Ron says. "We're a dying breed, pun intended!"

Picture Perfect

The ironic thing about beloved Boston wedding photographers Felix and Sara Rust? They don't have any pictures of their own vows, exchanged 25 years ago at a duck pond in the Fens. "Looking back, I wish we had made a bigger deal of it. After years of being married and being a photographer, I realize that weddings aren't just for you—they're for your friends and family and people who want to celebrate with you," Felix says. "Our relationship didn't change, but the world starts to see you as seriously as you've seen yourself all along."

Their own worldview was altered after having son Dash, 16, and daughter Magali, 13, which prompted Felix to pursue what was at the time an amateur passion for photography, shooting an image a day (called the "Daily Dash") for out-of-town relatives. Over time, portraits and children's photography morphed into a booming wedding photography business with Sara's support. "I just assumed it would be lining up and telling everyone what to do. But I did my own thing and snuck around like a fly on the wall, and it was basically playing around all day long," Felix says. "This won't be like every other 'kiss' photo you've ever seen on Pinterest; every shoot is different."

A self-described introvert who thrives when his "antidote" Sara assists in noisy crowds, Felix says they've developed a uniquely symbiotic style over the years. "Because we know each other so well we do this little maneuver where we are dancing out of the way and we're almost never in each other's shots. It's so beautifully choreographed."

Much like a first date, the Rusts interview all of their potential wedding couples to make sure they're compatible. Their newest passion—shooting boudoir photography—would never work if Sara weren't there to help subjects relax. "Like weddings, it's about these super-emotional, transitional moments," Felix says. "Women realize how truly beautiful they are when they see the photos for the first time."

Dead Set

Thrills and chills at the circus.

FOR THOSE WITH coulrophobia (that would be the official term for "fear of clowns," a condition likely spiking because of the recent spate of creepy clown sightings sweeping the country), the circus is already a pretty scary place. The Boston Circus Guild is taking it a step further with Cirque of the Dead, its annual horror show featuring aerialists, acrobats, burlesque performers, musicians and more—all masquerading as your worst nightmares. The immersive show places the audience right in the middle of the action, with zombies, mad scientists and assorted creepy crawlies suspended from the ceiling and performing all through the room. This is one circus you're more likely to run away from than run away to join, but enter if you dare when Cirque of the Dead takes over Oberon on Oct. 21-29. / Alexandra Cavallo

TO SEE OR NOT TO SEE Talk about daddy issues. The title prince in Hamlet is up to his ears in 'em, having come home for his father's funeral to find out that his sketchy uncle is now his stepdad and king—and a murderer, as Dad's vengeance-seeking ghost reveals. The Bard's famed tragedy is a natural choice to kick off Family Fault Lines, Actors' Shakespeare Project's 13th season, but the venue is an unexpected one: Director Doug Lockwood is staging the play at Newbury Street's Church of the Covenant, using the whole sanctuary space and the church organ to enhance the haunting vibe. SHE'S ALIVE! They say there's someone out there for everyone, even Frankenstein's Monster, who longs for a "friend like me" in the sequel to the film adaptation of Mary Shelley's iconic novel—and director James Whale makes it happen. After having initially declined to be a part of Bride of Frankenstein, Whale delivered a mate and reeeived raves in return: The 1935 classic, which has the unhinged Dr. Pretorius blackmailing Dr. Frankenstein into proceeding with his experiments, was lauded as being even better than the original. Make it a Halloween date night when the movie screens at the Brattle Theatre on Oct. 31. / Arden Stringer

American Honey ★★★ Few modern movies get under the skin more than the work of British filmmaker Andrea Arnold, writer/director of 2006's Red Road, 2009's Fish Tank and 2011's Wuthering Heights. She set out on numerous road trips across the U.S. to prepare for her first American-set feature, reportedly inspired by a New York Times piece about directionless young Millennials who criss-cross the country selling door-to-door magazine subscriptions. Arnold has cast her movie with mostly nonprofessional youths she discovered during her travels, though there are a few actors you might recognize, like Riley Keough (from TV's The Girlfriend Experience), who plays Krystal, the ringleader of the group of teens the film follows, often from the backseat of the van they drive from town to town. By far the most well-known of the performers is Shia LaBeouf, who plays Jake, the best salesman of the bunch and the guy who recruits Star (real discovery Sasha Lane), a teen who serves as both protagonist and audience surrogate as we observe this band of misfits. Star falls hard for Jake, which leads to complications, both because he's Krystal's boy toy and because this dictates a lot of screen time for LaBeouf, who distracts from the naturalism with his rattail and celebrity. Like her character's name, however, Lane is destined to be a star. (At Boston Common and Kendall Square.)

The Birth of a Nation ★★1/2 Actor Nate Parker's debut film as a writer/director, an earnest, raw look at a slave uprising in the antebellum South, shares its name with D.W. Griffith's The Birth of a Nation, the unquestionably racist 1915 drama that posited the Ku Klux Klan as heroes and saviors of the Southern states. While Parker has reclaimed the title with noble intentions, his filmmaking prowess falls far short when compared with Griffith, who helped invent cinematic techniques that have been in use for the past century. From the blunt messages spelled out by the script he conceived with his college roommate, Jean McGianni Celestin, to his heavy-handed poetic flourishes and seemingly empty attempts at symbolism (while a unique visual, why does an ear of corn bleed?), Parker is in over his head—at least as a director. His acting, however, is as strong as ever. He stars as Nat Turner, a slave who was taught to read and write by his master's wife (Penelope Ann Miller), a choice that inevitably sets him toward the path of rebellion. Armed with a Bible, Turner is tasked with using scripture to keep fellow slaves in line, and it's righteous indignation that compels him to break free. Capturing the zeitgeist, Parker's film is urgent if unremarkable. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Deepwater Horizon ★★★ This second successful collaboration between Boston-born actor Mark Wahlberg and director Peter Berg dramatizes the events surrounding the worst oil disaster in American history, and although Berg has certainly aimed to thrill an audience once the shit—plus a lot of mud and oil—hits the fan, he isn't afraid to point fingers while he entertains. The hiss-able "BP guys" are led by Donald Vidrine (a drawling John Malkovich), who's so oily, you wonder why our heroes didn't bypass the bottom of the ocean and simply drill him for fuel instead. "We are confident in the integrity of our see-ment," Vidrine insists through his Cheshire cat grin, although crew chief Jimmy Harrell (a well-cast Kurt Russell) isn't so sure. Neither is chief electronics technician Mike Williams (Wahlberg). Berg isn't in the business of exploitation here, but you'll definitely get what you paid for once things begin going BOOM. It's an apocalyptic vision that's downright biblical, a notion reinforced late in the picture when a sea of survivors recite the Lord's Prayer together. More than just a thrilling action movie, this is a moving testament to the 11 souls who lost their lives. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Girl on the Train ★★ The basic plot of this mystery/thriller isn't so bad; it's likely a reason the Paula Hawkins novel it's based on has spent so long on the bestseller lists. However, Erin Cressida Wilson's adapted screenplay does a poor job of laying out a cohesive framework. Needlessly convoluted with confusing time jumps, the film also suffers from less-than-Hitchcockian direction by Tate Taylor, who was more at ease behind the camera of 2011's The Help and definitely more adept at handling the passage of time in 2014's James Brown biopic, Get on Up. Here, Taylor relies far too much on unflattering closeups and unnecessary slow motion, both of which distract from the lurid tale that could have benefitted from a different touch. Strangely, the action has been transplanted from the book's U.K. setting to upstate New York, even though British actress Emily Blunt has been cast as Rachel, the recently divorced, boozy protagonist and unreliable narrator of one-third of our tale. She's easily the best thing in the film, which centers on a missing person case while weaving in infidelity, childbearing and possibly murder. If only the thrills matched the mystery. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Texas, but it's a classic Western through and through, full of moral grays and another towering performance by the gray-maned Jeff Bridges. He's back in Rooster Cogburn mode as a smarter-than-he-sounds Texas ranger, Marcus Hamilton, a jut-jawed good ol' boy who's equally at home chasing bank robbers as he is hurling racial slurs at his half-Comanche, half-Mexican partner, who loves the old coot anyway. Speaking of those bank robbers, they're a pair of desperate brothers: Tanner Howard (Ben Foster), a gun-happy career criminal who's recently been released from prison, and his younger, smarter brother, Toby (a revelatory Chris Pine), a divorced dad who's always walked the straight and narrow. But when the Howards face losing the land that's been in their family for generations, Toby works out a rather brilliant plan: They'll only rob the registers at each branch of the bank that's threatening to take everything from them. Stealing just a few thousand from each location keeps their crime spree out of federal jurisdiction, so if Hamilton can't catch them, they may just save the family's land after all, paying for it with money taken from the very company that's about to foreclose. Taylor Sheridan's screenplay also robs rather liberally from Cormac McCarthy's work, and it's even better than his script for last year's Sicario. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

The Magnificent Seven ★★★ When John Sturges directed 1960's The Magnificent Seven, it was already not-so-original, a Westernized version of Seven Samurai, Akira Kurosawa's 1954 masterpiece, itself a Japanese reconfiguring of American Western tropes. Hell, even Pixar's second film, 1998's A Bug's Life, is a variation on the same story—shorn of most of the death. Fret not, though. While the movie's PG-13 rating may not portend a bloodbath, director Antoine Fuqua's latest restores the basic tale's high body count. Fuqua reunites Denzel Washington and Ethan Hawke, co-stars of his 2001 crime drama, Training Day. Although a strong presence, Washington won't win another Oscar for his work here as Sam Chisolm, a "duly sworn warrant officer" who feels just a tad out of place, given that he's a black man hunting white criminals in 1879. OK, so the multicultural cast (Chris Pratt, Byung-hun Lee and Manuel Garcia-Rulfo among them) that composes the band of outlaws, bounty hunters, gamblers and hired guns that Sam assembles to protect a small town from a robber baron (Peter Sarsgaard) may be historically ridiculous, but it's the new wrinkle that co-writers Richard Wenk (Fuqua's The Equalizer) and Nic Pizzolatto (polarizing creator of HBO's True Detective) bring to this nevertheless entertaining spin on an old yarn, frayed though it is. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Miss Hokusai ★★★1/2 If you're a museumgoer, you may be familiar with the work of Japan's Ukiyo-e master Katsushika Hokusai. His most famous print, The Great Wave off Kanagawa, which features a gigantic ocean wave seemingly about to envelop Mount Fuji, frequently turns up on gift shop mugs and T-shirts. Keiichi Hara's sumptuously animated film beautifully evokes the artist's Edo (present-day Tokyo) in 1814, combining hand-drawn characters with a mixture of painted and computer-assisted environments by chief animator Yoshimi Itazu and background artist Hiroshi Ohno. Its focus, however, is not on Hokusai (voiced by Yutaka Matsushige), but on his 23-year-old daughter, O-Ei (Anne Watanabe), his assistant and a talented artist in her own right. Based on Hinako Sugiura's carefully researched, serialized manga that ran in Japan from 1983 to '87, the film contains subtle humor, some surrounding Hokusai disciple Zenjirô (Gaku Hamada), and melodrama involving O-Nao (Shion Shimizu), the artist's blind younger daughter. O-Ei may be the picture's beating heart, but it's the relationship with her sister that provides its soulful humanity. (At Kendall Square.)

Miss Peregrine's Home for Peculiar Children ★★ A little bit late to the literary party, Tim Burton has finally directed a movie based on a young adult property, tackling the first of Ransom Riggs' Peculiar Children books. On paper, the novel may have seemed like a good match for the filmmaker's sensibilities, but even though the production has been impeccably designed, playfully incorporating Burton's interest in the gothic and off-center, there's an unfortunate lack of character to the peculiar children onscreen, beginning with Jake Portman (Ender's Game's Asa Butterfield), a boy who can see invisible monsters. His journey introduces him to other "peculiars," from Enoch O'Conner (Finlay MacMillan)—a boy who uses the hearts of tiny animals to breathe life into inanimate objects (allowing Burton to indulge his stop-motion interests)—to Emma Bloom (Ella Purnell), a girl who's lighter than air and would float away if not for her lead shoes. But then, she'd also float away with Jake's heart, repeating history that transpired some 70 years before with Jake's grandfather (Terence Stamp). How is this possible? It all has to do with a convoluted, Groundhog Day-like time-travel gimmick known as a "loop," which is controlled by Miss Peregrine (Eva Green from Burton's Dark Shadows, his latest muse), who also has the ability to transform into a bird. If this all sounds like too much for one film, it is. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Queen of Katwe ★★★ After their modest success with 2014's Million Dollar Arm, Disney is back with another inspirational sports drama set in a foreign land. And although both are based on true stories, this tale of a young girl from rural Uganda who pursues her dream of becoming a chess champion doesn't rely on the trope of a white American who makes it possible, as John Hamm's character did in the former film when he traveled to India to tap cricket players who might excel at playing baseball. Instead, director Mira Nair (Monsoon Wedding) allows her film to be an East African story through and through, utilizing the native tongues of English and Swahili. As soccer player-turned-missionary Robert Katende (Selma's David Oyelowo) begins teaching strategic thinking and risk-taking to underprivileged youths through the game of chess, he recognizes the potential in 10-year-old Phiona Mutesi (luminous newcomer Madina Nalwanga), encouraging her to compete on a higher level. Alas, Phiona's mother (Lupita Nyong'o, an Oscar winner for 12 Years a Slave) would rather her daughter be more practical and sell corn to help keep a roof over their heads. OK, so William Wheeler's script (based on the book by Tim Crothers) isn't exactly breaking much new ground, but the winning performances greatly elevate this familiar story. (At Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Sully ★★★ Nearly every time a film starring Tom Hanks comes along, critics make the observation that the actor is "the new Jimmy Stewart." But isn't it about time that we recognize the two-time Oscar winner for who he really is? If we're lucky enough to ever see another actor come along with this kind of charisma and career, perhaps the best compliment we might pay this hypothetical performer will be to refer to him as "the new Tom Hanks." But for now, we have the real thing, a man at the top of his profession in the fourth decade of his career, giving one of his best performances while working for another legend for the first time. That legend is Clint Eastwood, an 86-year-old actor who has carved out a significant second career as director, making another in a string of biographies of real-life figures. His latest subject? Chesley "Sully" Sullenberger, an airline pilot known for saving the lives of 155 people in the "Miracle on the Hudson." This dramatized account shows us the forced landing from different points of view in each of the film's three acts, but it's during the rescue effort, when hundreds of New Yorkers mobilize to save every last passenger, that you may shed a tear; it's here that Eastwood displays the best of humanity, moored by Hanks' dialed-back performance. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

DEATH BECOMES THEM

Prefer thrills and chills of the sonic variety? While the crowds are traipsing to the bars dressed as sexy Ken Bone, instead spend Halloween night with Tegan and Sara, who are headlining an All Hallows' Eve show at the House of Blues. Somehow, we doubt the Canadian synth-pop duo will have any trouble filling a holiday house—their June-released eighth studio album, Love You to Death, is so good, it's scary. The identical twin sister act have been steadily building a dynamo career for almost two decades, honing an infectious electro-pop sound marked by slick beats, interwoven call-and-repeat vocals and wry lyricism, like that of Love You to Death's breakout banger "Boyfriend," a love song that finds the duo bemoaning a girl who can't decide if she wants to be a friend or a lover. Get your tricks and your treats when the sisters slay at the House of Blues on Oct. 31. / Alexandra Cavallo

Edited by Sarah Hagman

FINE PRINTS MassArt Foundation director Robert Bachelder has got quite the poster collection. After lending works to the National Gallery of Art and the Museum of Fine Arts, he's bringing 131 of his vintage placards together in the first exhibition of his collection, A Century of Style: Masterworks of Poster Design. During the past few decades, Bachelder has swept up works from well-respeeted artists, including Art Nouveau pioneer Gustav Klimt and post-Impressionist and Moulin Rouge frequenter Henri de Toulouse-Lautrec, plus gems from Emil Cardinaux, who's credited with producing the first modern advertising poster and putting Swiss resort towns on the map with designs like his Palace Hotel–St. Moritz, seen above. Find that and more posted at MassArt's Stephen D. Paine Gallery through Dec. 3. / Sarah Hagman

FASHION POLICE

When Carmen premiered in 1875, it was roundly panned by the critics. One hundred forty years later, tastes have certainly changed.

Boston Lyric Opera opened its 40th season with Bizet's classic about a fiery Spanish temptress, which may explain why many women in the black-tie crowd opted to wear red à la the shady dame from Seville. Prominent among the throng: gala host Willa Bodman and the debonair Taylor, Beacon Hillions Suki and Miguel de Braganca, brunette beauty Susan Poduska and her adoring other half, Bill, equestrienne extraordinaire Diana Rockefeller, Philanthroposaurus rex Teddy Cutler, the ever dapper Arthur Winn, South End nabobs Kurt Gress and Sam Parkinson, force of nature Wendy Shattuck and the always affable Sam Plimpton, Janet "Princess Zhanay" Goff, Duxbury duo Lynn Dale and Frank Wisneski, his gorgeous daughter, Ashley, and her hunky husband, Will Heward, to name a mere smattering.

The evening began with cocktails at the Opera House and continued with the performance of Calixto Bieito's unexpectedly cutting-edge and mesmerizingly sexy production, which prompted one guest to say, "I don't even like opera, and I want to see it again."

After a thunderous standing ovation, guests made their way to the Ritz-Carlton for a dinner of Spanish-inspired delicacies, punctuated by flamenco performances. In fact, the only thing missing was a bullfight.

The evening's cattiest exchange: "Believe it or not, I cried at the end."

"Well, I could cry just looking at some of these outfits."

IF THE SHOE FITS

To kick off its 35th season, the Huntington Theatre Company celebrated opening night of Sunday in the Park with George on a Wednesday in the Scene Shop with a Who's Who of Boston.

Front and center: banking bigwig Bernie Fulp and his Wonder Woman, Carol, literary agent Ike Williams and soignée Englishwoman Caroline Courtauld, arts patrons Cokie and Lee Perry, gorgeous jewelry designer April Soderstrom, the flawless Cassandra Henderson, her brother, retired museum head Douglas Hyland and his stunning wife, Tita, toothsome blonde Adrienne Camire, banking babe Dyan Goodwin and her other half, Rob Serio, uber philanthropists Debbie and Bob First, Boston's reigning fairy godfather, Danny Mullin, criminally handsome pair Dominic Cioffoletti and Chris Scinto, ICA head honcha Jill Medvedow, artistic director Peter DuBois and one woman who answered the question "How are you?" by saying "Above ground."

Dinner was delicious, the play earned a well-deserved standing ovation, and dessert and coffee were served back in the scene shop, where everyone raved about how amazing the production was. Overheard by the bar at intermission: A man carrying a glass of wine said, "I'm locked and loaded," to which his date replied, "You're just loaded."

A MARVELOUS NIGHT

Few places are as magical as the Esplanade at dusk. Add in a beautifully decorated tent with an Airstream trailer serving cocktails and a swanky crowd ready to get down, and you've got yourself the Moondance Gala.

A fundraiser for the Esplanade Association, the elegant evening took place near the statue of Arthur Fiedler, and it attracted the likes of co-chairs Matthew and Lori Sidman, the swanlike Carol Deane, party pair Neal Balkowitsch and Donald Nelson, Back Bay beautiful people Tamar and Ken Frieze, the incomparably lovely Julie Gordon and her dashing husband, Phil, brunette bombshell Jeryl Oristaglio and her rock star other half, Steve, fashion designer Remy Schaefer Stressenger, the dazzling Allison O'Neil and one person who said, "I needed a can of WD-40 to get into my dress this evening."

However, the evening's best exchange was this: "You're looking sharp."

"Well, I'm feeling kind of prickly." ◆

IN MEMORIAM

Boston became a little less fabulous and a lot less irreverent with the death of John Michael Gray, one half of the inimitable Hat Sisters.

Created on a whim for Carnival in Provincetown, the gender-fluid duo—think Dame Edna with mustaches—have been an unsinkably upbeat presence at fundraisers for causes ranging from feeding the sick to homelessness to you name it. Born out of the darkest days of the AIDS crisis, the party pair became part of the fabric of Boston's and Provincetown's social life; in short, if there was a fundraiser for a good cause, the Hat Sisters were there to buoy the mood and inject a little color into the proceedings.

In a 2013 interview, late Boston mayor Tom Menino recalled a meeting of the U.S. Conference of Mayors in Key West, Fla. He was president of the group and was scheduled to attend a large dinner, but then he found out the Hat Sisters were in town: "I dumped the other mayors. The Hat Sisters do so much good. We've had a lot of fun over the years."

Our deepest condolences to Gray's husband, Tim O'Connor. The world has lost an impish, sweet, giant-hearted man. Hats off to you.

MAIN FREEZE

I AM PRETTY WOWED BY THE COVER subject for our Winter Sports issue, and not just because I'm a complete klutz who hasn't dared to step onto an ice rink since an ego- and knee-bruising debacle in high school. Three-time All-American, two-time Olympian, six-time world champ and an MVP many times over, Boston Pride forward Hilary Knight is one of the world's top players in a sport where women have had to fight for recognition and a wage. And she's a delight to boot, as Jonathan Soroff's interview with the hockey star suggests. Elsewhere, Soroff travels to a luxe Utah resort in a quest to help his husband venture off the bunny slope. Closer to home, the staff rounds up nine new reasons to seek out wintry adventure in New England, from this month's Ski World Cup in Killington to a pop-up shop for alpine apparel right here in Boston. Meanwhile, Sarah Hagman and Matt Martinelli team up for a preview of the Bruins and Celtics seasons. And speaking of, I check out a Boston Celtics jacket of a different color at a new local fashion destination. Happy reading.

ART OF THE MATTER

A BUDDING DRAMATURG HELPS BRING A MOVEMENT TO A BOSTON STAGE.

MINUTE BY MINUTE: A rehearsal of a scene from Every 28 Hours

Acting as Activism

Boston theater artist Phaedra Scott won't soon forget Nov. 22, 2014. That's the night Cleveland police shot and killed 12-year-old Tamir Rice while he was holding a replica gun in a city park. At the time, she lived on the street where Rice was shot. "I was scared, frustrated, but I craved an outlet to do something."

More than a year after moving to Boston, she's found one outlet in Every 28 Hours, a free performance of 80 one-minute plays coming to the Museum of Fine Arts' Remis Auditorium at 2 pm on Nov. 5. Inspired by the Black Lives Matter movement, it takes its title from the widely shared and contested claim that a black person is killed every 28 hours in the U.S. by a vigilante, security guard or police officer. Scott, who works at Company One Theatre, is helping to produce the Boston performance of the project, which was initiated by artists from the Oregon Shakespeare Festival and the One-Minute Play Festival. Originally staged in St. Louis and Ferguson, the project expanded to performances across the nation this fall.

"This play serves as a response to the injustices we see committed by law enforcement against black people. What we were drawn to is the scope of experiences the play encompasses," Scott says. "There are plays devoted to the police perspective, plays about youth, mothers and people who fall in the intersections of ability, queerness and all races—not just black and white."

To perform plays that encompass all those perspectives and nine different themes, Scott tapped not only Company One, but four other local companies, including Harvard's black student theater group, Black CAST, and the LGBT-focused Theatre Offensive. The 90-minute show is being presented in conjunction with the MFA's Political Intent exhibit, and the ultimate goal is to spark a conversation within the local community.

"We wanted to perform the play in a space that welcomed our collaborators, but also a space where we could have substantial engagement with our audience afterward," Scott says. "What actionable steps can we take? How can we work together? How can we respond as a community, and as individuals? How can we respond through art?" / Matt Martinelli

JACKET GUILLAUME ZICCARELLI, STORE EXTERIOR SIMON SIMARD

HUMAN INTEREST

Jessica Knez has been stocking her buzzy Back Bay boutique, All Too Human, with fashions from designers like Dries Van Noten, Mira Mikati and Raf Simons since the store's June opening, but her latest arrival isn't for sale. That's because this statement piece is a permanent art installation created by New York artist Daniel Arsham, who reimagined a Boston Celtics jacket as a crumbling relic that looks like it was pulled from a latter-day Pompei. "I'm thinking about a kind of fictional archaeology—an archaeology at some point in the distant future that reimagines the things from our everyday lives as if they had sort of been uncovered on this future archaeology site," says Arsham, who is color blind and rendered the jacket in a trademark monochrome gray. This isn't the only artwork commissioned for the shop by Knez, a Tufts alum who cut her teeth as a buyer at Lord & Taylor and Bergdorf Goodman and aims to make All Too Human a home for contemporary art and events as well as fashion. She's also stocking Arsham's limited-edition apparel project, which is likewise inspired by his fascination with archaeology—but made with materials that should be a bit more wearable than solid cyclonite. / Jocqueline Houton

EUROPEAN INSPIRATION: Chef Douglass Williams' time in Paris motivated him to open his own Italian restaurant.

NOT-SO-LITTLE ITALY

A NEW SOUTH END EATERY DRAWS INFLUENCES FROM MANY REGIONS OF ITALY.

782 Tremont St., Boston

Douglass Williams learned a lot while cooking in Paris. But the biggest takeaway from his stint in the City of Light was that it's time to open his own space. And so, the 32-year-old is set to open MIDA in the South End in November.

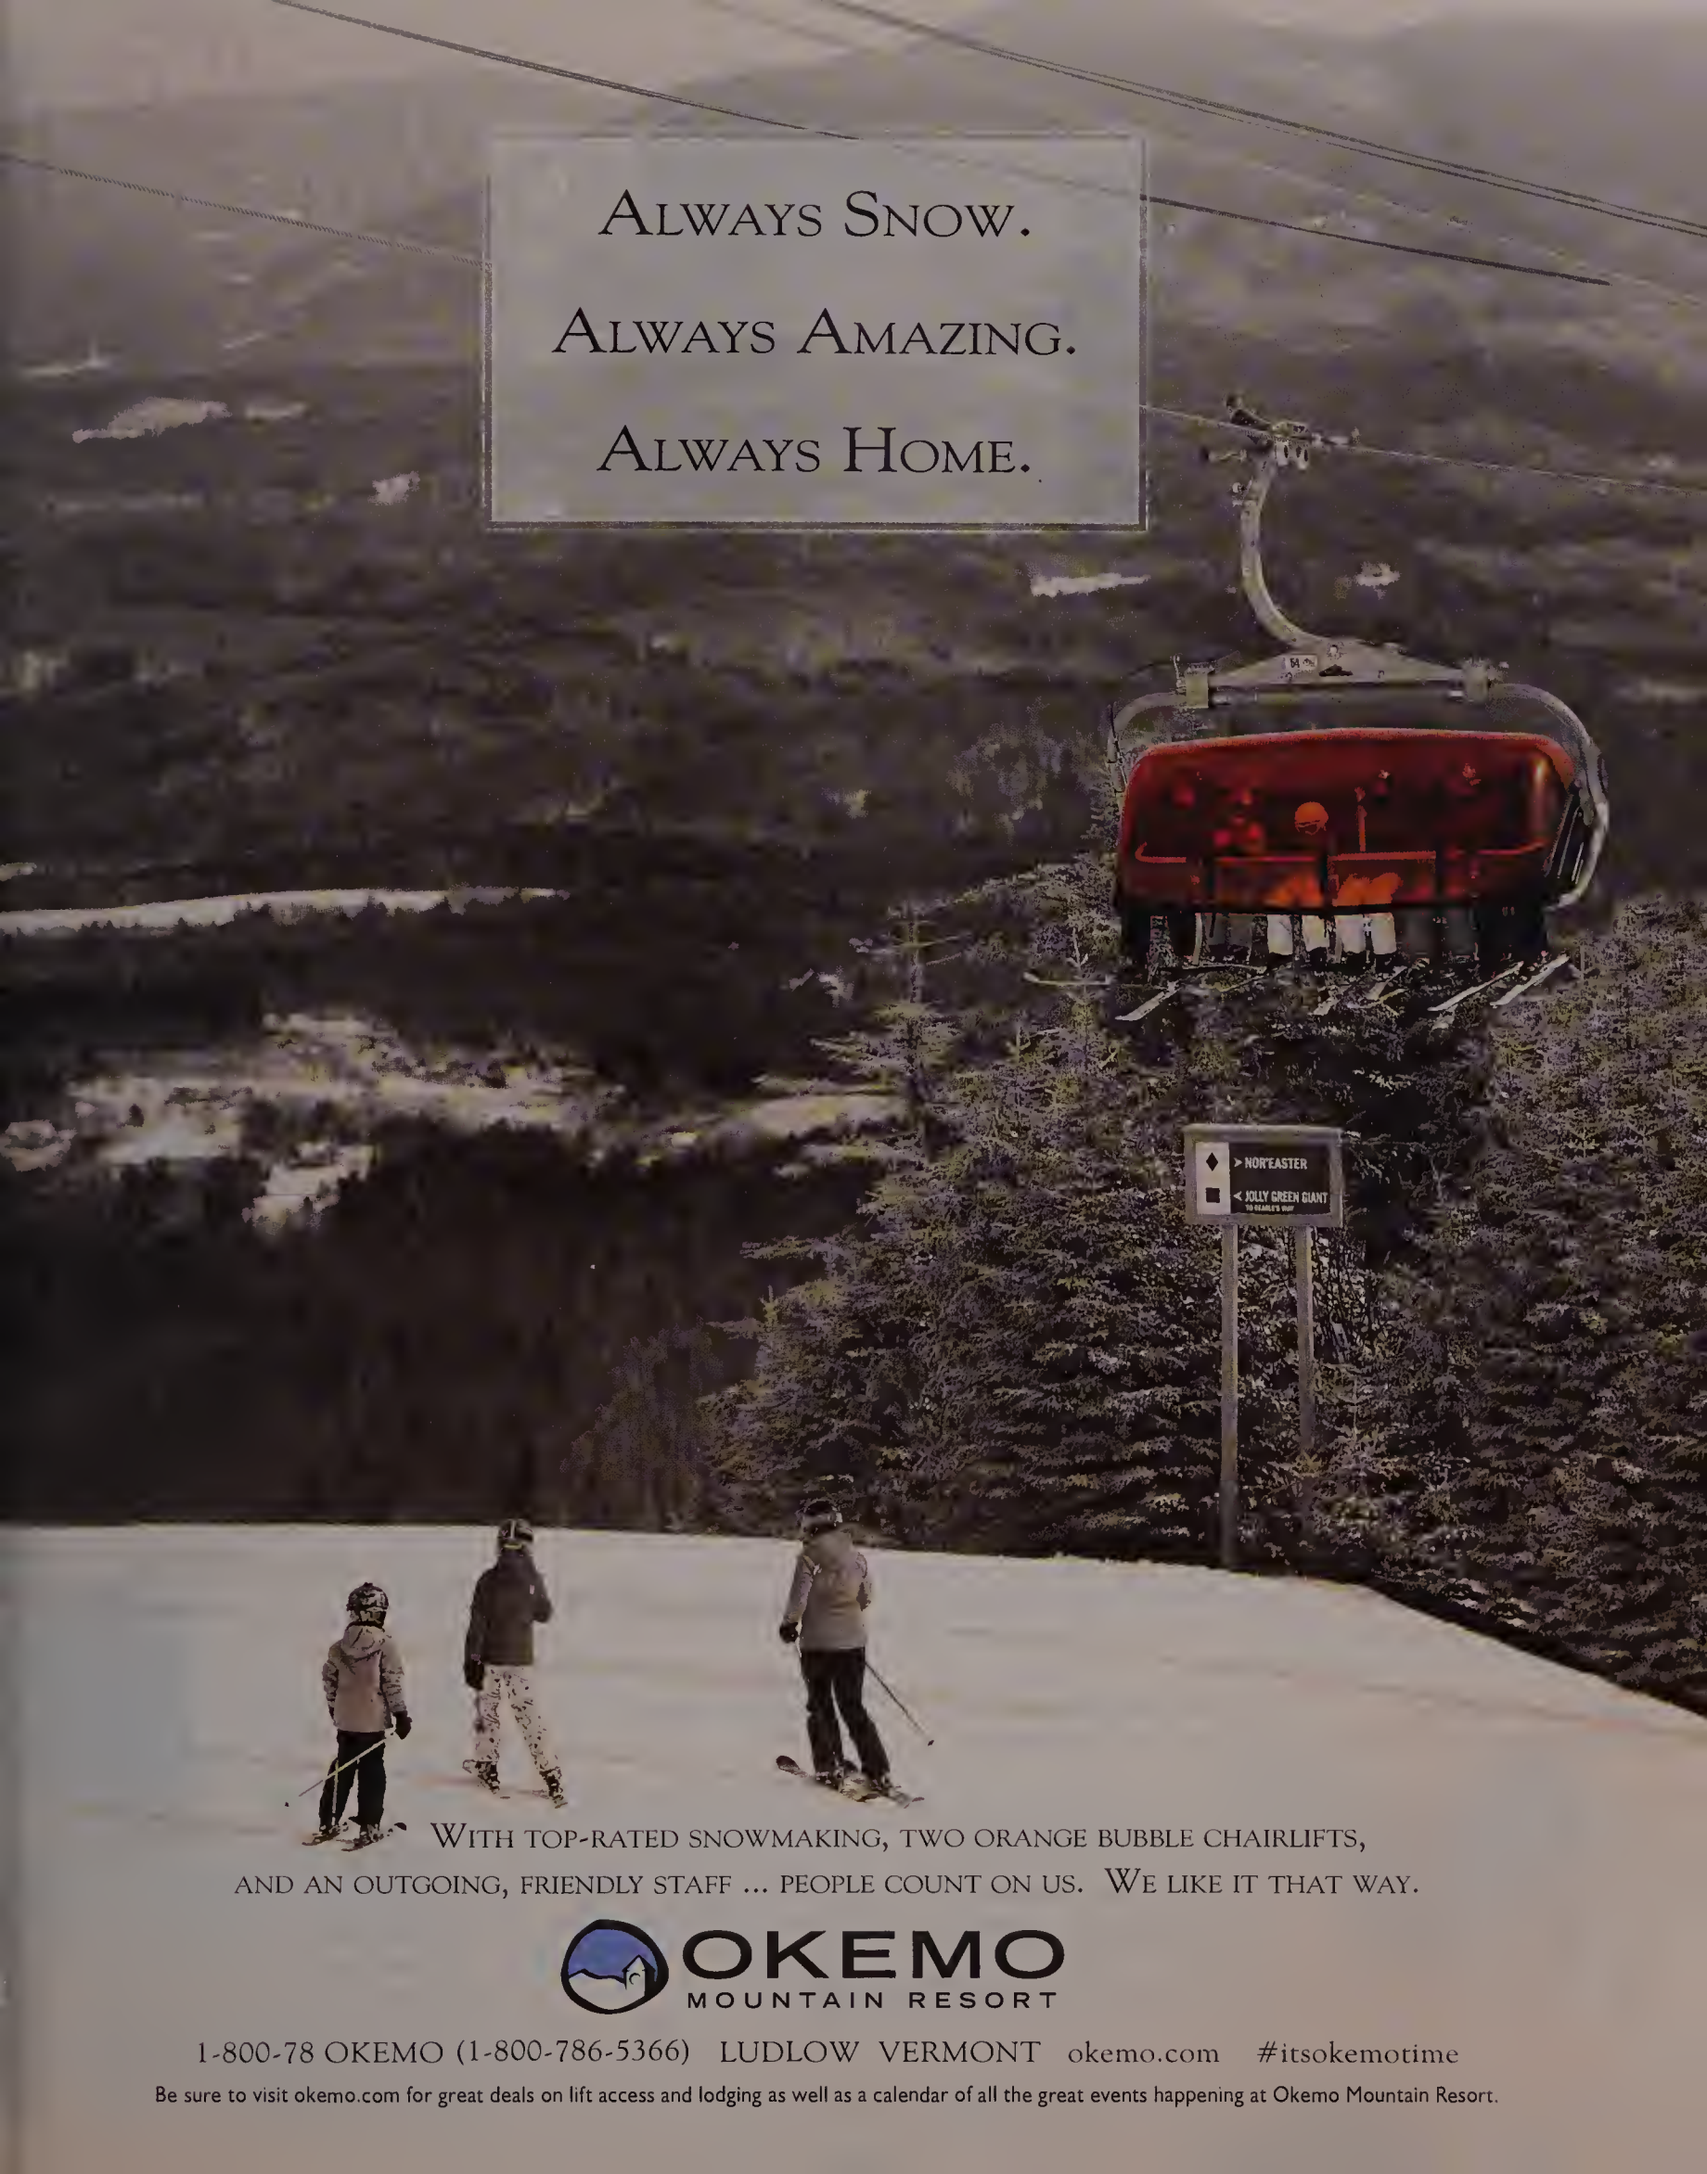
"When I was in Paris, I saw everybody around my age—27, 28, 29—they all had restaurants already. Established restaurants, a year or two in," Williams says. "I thought, I need to get back to Boston, get with a partner, get with great people around me and start to create my vision."

That vision is Italian, with food from all across the country, rather than sticking to one region. He says the menu will tilt toward Southern Italian in the warmer months and Northern Italian in the cooler months. Williams uses a bundle of adjectives to describe the cuisine: "Think spicy, charred, crunchy, crispy, saucy." The menu will include bar snacks such as beef lardo toast or cod milt bacalao, as well as appetizers like charred ocean prawns and quince mostarda. Larger plates can be eaten as an entree, but will be served sliced or portioned to make sharing easier. The pasta section will have four to five housemade pastas that will change seasonally, with larger, heavier noodles in the winter and lighter, thinner ones in the summer.

"I said, 'What do I like to do the most? Absolutely the most, out of anything?' And I said, 'Make pasta,'" he recalls. "We'll be playing with all sorts of flours. And we're trying to take the pastas all over the map."

The wine list will be the focus of the beverage program, with 40 bottles that Williams says will be primarily Italian. "I want it so the glasses are clinking, bottles are moving and people are laughing and leaning over into each other's ear." Taking over the former home of Cluckit! and Estelle's, the intimate 70-seat space will remain mostly the same as its previous incarnation, with a 12-seat bar and a mix of lowtop and hightop seating. The exterior has a fresh coat of paint, replacing the bright red with a rich black hue.

"It was like a fire truck with no wheels!" Williams exclaims. "It's a SoHo-noir, if you will. It's a shotgun-style restaurant, long and narrow with huge windows with lots of light. When you turn down the lights low, it glows, which I think emanates this wonderful projection of light onto the street. And the people who pass by, it just invites you in. That's the feeling we want."



CONNECT FOUR: La caleta's plantain bowls offer four different fillings.

Good Eats: Cups Runneth Over

Restaurateur Hector Piña made several trips to Havana in preparation for opening his Cuban-focused Doña Habana restaurant and lounge in Newmarket Square this September, speaking with chefs and locals to ensure the authenticity of flavors. The result is a menu of seafood and meat plates and sandwiches, plus la caleta, a crowd-pleasing appetizer that features four fried plantain cups filled with shredded beef in a tomato-based Creole sauce, fried shredded beef seasoned with lime, ground beef topped with roasted veggies, and shrimp cooked in garlic and olive oil. Thirsty? Sip your way through the restaurant's 53 flavors of mojitos. / Meghan Kavanaugh

THE PROS OF PROSECCO

Although prosecco's popularity continues undiminished, most of the examples on the market today taste bland and generic, with aggressive bubbles and vague pear-like flavors. Even the finest bottles can teeter on the border of delicate and innocuous. However, when prosecco tastes balanced, and there's even a hint of minerality or citrus, this wine can be a delightfully refreshing bubbly. And its moderate price is always a plus. Blind tastings never lie, and these three are the creme de la creme from my most recent series. / Sandy Block

DESIDERIO JEIO PROSECCO, VALDOBBIADENE DOCG BRUT, NV

This exemplifies to me what prosecco should be: pale in color, with classic peach, melon and floral scents. A fresh bone-dry rendition, it's elegant yet tangy and finishes with a nice twist of lemon bitterness. This wine is great as an aperitif or with casual fare featuring salty flavors. Prosciutto and melon, anyone?

$18, The Urban Grape, Boston

VALDO "ORO PURO" PROSECCO SUPERIORE, VALDOBBIADENE DOCG BRUT, NV

A long name with big flavor, this sparkler is honeyed, with apple, citrus, apricot and stone fruit notes. A little richer and more perfumed than the other selections, this is also bone dry and quite lively on the palate. It's an appealing prosecco for those looking for more intense flavor and would be great with a lightly curried seafood or chicken dish.

$17, Gordon's Fine Wines & Liquors, Boston

ZARDETTO PROSECCO DOC BRUT, NV

This medium-textured prosecco is a longtime favorite, luminescent in the glass, with juicy green apple, pear and melon aromas. Clean, dry and very finely balanced with bright acids and hints of minerality, this sparkling wine is an excellent easy-drinking choice for fish salads or a plate of fruit and cheese.

25 YEARS

The Improper is celebrating its 25th anniversary in 2016, and to properly mark the occasion, we've been digging through the archives for gems from issues past. Behold, some past hot (er, cold) items, ranging from a former Olympic skater's vacation advice to a tip for warding off post-ski lodge tippling hangovers.

March 31, 1993

In a cover story titled "Back Off, Big Guy: Cam Fights the Career Reaper," former Bruins right wing Cam Neely, then just back on the ice after a career-threatening knee injury, talked with The Improper about his future with the league. "I love this city. I plan on hanging around," he said. Seeing as he went on to play three more seasons and is currently sitting pretty in his seventh season as Bruins prez, it looks like he made good on that promise.

Nov. 6, 1996

One thing we've learned in our travels through our archives: The '90s were all about nudity. In this Ski Issue featuring a snow bunny clad in nothing but a fur hat as a cover model, we ran down the best mountains to ski and shred in New England. However, we were most drawn to an item about homegrown hangover remedies, like this one from Watch City Brewing Co. brewer Steve Lincoln, who swore by a preventative dose of a half-gallon of water and half a box of Grape Nuts after a night of imbibing. Après ski on!

Nov. 7, 2001

Woburn-born Olympian Nancy Kerrigan starred on the cover of our '01 Winter Adventures issue, in which she described her favorite winter getaway: Pittsburg, N.H., where she would "trade double axels for double axles" as an avid snowmobiler. "It's so beautiful up there, especially after it snows," she said. "You feel like you're in the middle of nowhere, and you see deer and moose along the trail."

DREAMING BIG: Mehdi [illegible] ed to large [illegible]

RAISING HOPES

If you've passed through Dewey Square Park sometime in the past month, you may have noticed a new addition. That would be Tehran muralist and street artist Mehdi Ghadyanloo, who's been hard at work creating a 5,320-square-foot mural on the Greenway Wall, commissioned by the Greenway Conservancy. We checked in with the former farmer-turned-internationally recognized artist to talk about his new piece, which will be on view for the next year. / Alexondro Covollo

ARE YOU EXCITED FOR YOUR FIRST PIECE COMMISSIONED IN THE U.S.? Yes, definitely I'm excited because I can show my work in this corner of [the] world. People are coming here and they follow public art very seriously. I'm happy that many people come every day just to check the progress. ... And they take selfies and pictures. It's good. It shows that they like it.

WHAT ARE SOME CHALLENGES WHEN YOU'RE CREATING A PIECE OF ART THIS LARGE IN SCALE? Conceptually, I just really want to [reach] people and give them a moment of joy. Also, I want to turn their imagination engine on. But I mean, about the form, I really like to create something that they can't ignore. Something very strong that invites them to see and create their own story when they're looking at my work.

WHAT'S THE INSPIRATION BEHIND THIS PIECE? The name of this piece is Spoces of Hope. I was here three months ago just to study Boston, to study the environment and talk to people. And because it's near South Station, I found that lots of people usually came out of this station and go directly to work in groups, you know. In the evening, they came back in the same situation, and I decided to use these people—I mean ordinary people with casual clothes and in suits—in my painting.

IS POSITIVITY A GOAL IN A LOT OF YOUR WORK? Yes, in my public art works. I also work on my works in the studio, and they are different, though in terms of visual language they are the same: I'm using perspective, I'm using optical illusion, I'm using symbols. ... [But in a public space] I see a response from people, and I don't want someone to see my work and decide to commit suicide or something like this. Yes. I want my works here, in Tehran, everywhere, to be positive because, you know ... they are forced to see this artwork because it's in their streets, in their parks, so definitely it should be positive. ... I think that now when we turn on the TV or when we go to social media, everything that we can read is bad news—about the Middle East, about bombings everywhere in Europe. You know, everywhere. What you need is art to balance your life. When you can't change something, when you're not president, it's good to be an artist—to help people, to give them a moment of balance between lots of bad news.

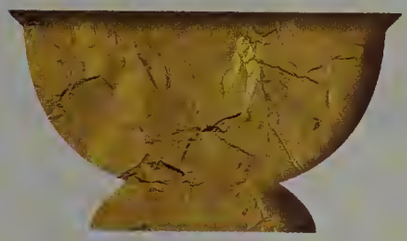
Sweet Talk

'Tis the season for gorging on so many sugary holiday treats you risk giving yourself diabetes. A tasty alternative? Put some of those cookies and candies to use—and spare your waistline a bit—by building a festive gingerbread house. For pro tips for budding architects, we tapped Beth Veneto of Quincy's Ginger Betty's Bakery, the Kids' Favorite winner from last year's Gingerbread House Competition, which will once again bring edible edifices to the Seaport World Trade Center for the 30th annual Boston Christmas Festival on Nov. 4-6. / Alexandro Covollo

On climate control... If it's too damp or humid out, your gingerbread pieces will absorb the moisture and get really soft, even after you've baked them. This is tragic in gingerbread land...you may have to bake more walls.



On favorite decorations... A few favorite candies to decorate with are spice drops, rainbow sprinkles, lollipops, peppermints and nonpareils—usually anything colorful and fun. We also use ice-cream cones as Christmas trees and pretzels as fences.

On construction... When I'm going to make a gingerbread house, I always start with a pen and paper first. I draw out the design of my house and make a template out of cardboard or manila folders. Next I roll out dough and cut pieces, making sure that when they're transferred onto cookie sheets all the edges are straight and even. Once the gingerbread shapes are baked and cooled, I begin assembling. The key for this stage is to make sure your royal icing has stiff peaks. Be sure to let the house structure stand for at least five hours before putting on the roof—it's best if you let the house sit overnight.

SWEET SOLUTION: Proceeds from gingerbread houses from bakers like Beth Venieto go to local nonprofit Housing Families.

WHALE OF A TALE

A JOURNALIST TURNED NOVELIST READS BETWEEN THE LINES OF TWO LOCAL LITERARY ICONS' LETTERS.

The Whale: A Love Story* by Mark Beauregard
Published by Viking, 288 pages, $26

THOUGH WE THINK OF MOBY-DICK AS A masterpiece of American fiction, in fact it flopped and wasn't recognized as a classic until 70 years after its publication. And Herman Melville was suffering both financial strain and literary turmoil while trying to capture that mythic whale on the page.

But a surprising spark changed things for the dark writer when he met Nathaniel Hawthorne during an 1850 vacation in the Berkshires. In this novel, Melville falls head over heels for the author of The Scarlet Letter, though both are married. Mark Beauregard's fictionalized characters brilliantly inhabit the language of the time—swirling, metaphorical, romantic. For Melville, as in his iconic book, the style is almost biblical. He's the desperate pursuer of the more cautious Hawthorne, though eroticism is in the air between them in meetings and in letters—some invented, others actual missives written by the two men. Melville manipulates his family into moving to Pittsfield to be near Hawthorne, who becomes his literary mentor through writing and publishing travails. Yes, there is a kiss that Melville would like to take to the next level, but the more ambivalent Hawthorne draws away.

They do, however, overlap in their literary endeavors: Hawthorne is at work on The House of the Seven Gables while the floundering Melville dives into the manuscript that will become Moby-Dick. The actual Melville dedicated that book to Hawthorne, and this novel about novelists deliciously blends the real with the imagined.

FROM PAGE 150: How could two such diametrically opposed beings live simultaneously in the same Hawthorne—this casual, congenial soul standing before Herman speaking frankly about his friends and optimistically about the future; and the tortured, inward-gazing seer of doom, obsessed with his own sins and the sins of his forefathers? ◆

What Are You Waiting For?

LIVING OFF THE LAND: Quebec's Eastern Townships are lush with locally grown culinary delights.

Traveler's Checks

Give your stomach a rest with a trip to Savon des Cantons, a natural soap factory that allows guests to make their own.

Discover the power of the blackcurrant berry at Domaine Ives Hill, home to 7,000 blackcurrant plants used to produce berry sangria, aperitif and wine, as well as jams, syrups and teas.

GO TO TOWN

EAT YOUR WAY THROUGH QUEBEC'S BUCOLIC EASTERN TOWNSHIPS.

THERE MAY BE NO BETTER WAY TO START a trip to the Eastern Townships, a picturesque region of Quebec just over the borders of Vermont, New Hampshire and Maine, than to check into the Auberge & Spa West Brome. A four-hour drive from Boston (or just an hour east of Montreal should you take one of Air Canada's daily flights), the inn and spa houses guests in former condominiums complete with fireplaces and kitchens—not that you'll need to cook. The inn's on-site bistro exemplifies the region's celebration of farm-to-table cuisine with a menu that uses the 80 veggies and herbs grown in the property's organic garden for dishes like a board of heirloom tomatoes with basil and cheese, as well as local products like a Brome Lake duck leg confit served atop a bed of housemade gnocchi and mushrooms.

Further north, executive chef Mirsad Basic at Hôtel Château-Bromont's Quatre Canards has a similar culinary philosophy, building dishes around produce found in a terrace vegetable garden, which he plans to expand next year, and local products, like honeysuckle berry chutney from nearby Granby that features in a duck foie gras appetizer and Fitch Bay lavender that lends subtle floral notes to the creme brulee. (The cuisine isn't the only elevated aspect here—the hotel is adjacent to the Bromont ski resort, and suites feature wrought-iron spiral staircases that lead to lofted lounges.)

Should your sweet tooth still need satisfying, drive just a few minutes to the Musée du Chocolat de Bromont, where you can snack on a variety of truffles made on-site while sipping a cup (or bowl!) of creamy dark hot chocolate in the cafe. Then brush up on some art history with a stroll through the museum, which features chocolate renderings of works like Venus de Milo and Girl with a Pearl Earring, plus a primer on the origins of cocoa.

Lest you think a visit to the Eastern Townships is all about eating, rest assured there are plenty of opportunities to imbibe as well. Designate a driver and head out to explore one of the 22 vineyards that make up La Route des Vins, the region's official wine route that covers nearly 90 miles. Be sure to stop at Vignoble de l'Orpailleur, a vineyard that boasts award-winning bottles, including an ice wine—a regional specialty that leans into Canadian winters by producing wine from frozen grapes—that has more than 30 accolades to its name. A similar product can be found just across the street at Union Libre Cidre & Vin, an orchard and vineyard that makes an ice cider by squeezing apples and leaving them outside all winter to freeze. More of a beer person? Off the wine route, but worth a stop, is Microbrasserie La Memphré, a microbrewery that produces a dozen brews ranging from a blonde ale and a witbier to a Scotch ale and a milk stout, all of which are named after local locations and historical events.

Your liver will appreciate a trip to find comfort food further east in Compton, a village home to just over 3,000 people. Channel your inner cheesemonger at Fromagerie La Station, a 400-acre organic dairy farm that has been in the Bolduc family for four generations. Take a guided tour and see the ripening rooms before trying some of the award-winning housemade cheeses, like the Alfred Le Fermier, a nutty raw milk cheese aged for eight months and named for the farm's founder. Or go dairy-free with a stop at Que du Bonheur, a cafe that makes sorbet using seasonal Compton berries—a treat that can be enjoyed from the comfort of the eatery's tufted crushed velvet chairs or on-the-go with pints found in shops throughout town.

Que du Bonheur sorbet is just one of the treats you'll want to pick at Verger Le Gros Pierre, an orchard with 21 varieties among its 8,000 trees, including the crisp French transplant Primgold. After taking a tractor tour of the grounds, finish off your visit with a slice of apple pie or a baked apple filled with chocolate ganache, washing it down with a bottle of pure apple juice that changes its taste from batch to batch depending on the varieties available at bottling time.

Locals say that a person could happily live on just the fresh fruits, cheeses and other foodstuffs produced by Compton's creative makers. For visitors, at least, it's a wonderful way to spend a long weekend. Bon appétit. ◆

FRESS TO THE NINES

MAMALEH'S CHANNELS THE SWEET SOUL OF THE NEIGHBORHOOD JEWISH DELI

One longstanding Boston mystery is why we've lacked great restaurants offering the traditional delicatessen cuisine of the Central and Eastern European Jewish diaspora. One could find echoes of it—a creditable bagel here, some fine pastrami there, plenty of gastropub-inspired forays into pickling, curing and smoking—but no single place with a decent range of high-quality, canonical Ashkenazi Jewish dishes, never mind finding them prepared in-house. With the new Mamaleh's near Kendall Square, a group of seven co-owners, most connected with the nearby State Park restaurant, have filled that gap with a vengeance.

Chef Tyler Sundet sounds a very promising opening note with matzah ball soup ($6 small, $8 large), with its limpid, deeply flavored chicken broth and chewy/tender, slightly fluffy cracker-meal dumpling. Mushroom barley soup ($6/$8) similarly wows with a darkly rich porcini broth and hearty mix of root vegetables and grains. Scoops of vegetables from the takeout deli case include a crisp, sweet-tart red cabbage slaw with currants ($4) and roasted whole carrots ($5) scented with coriander and dotted with goat's milk feta and the crispy-cereal crunch of puffed wild rice.

The fried and the fatty get their luscious due in many dishes, first with knishes, fist-sized wheat-dough turnovers filled with chopped pastrami and corned beef ($6) or mashed potato ($4) and served with deli mustard for dipping. Minnie's blintzes ($10 for three) read like delightfully eggy crepes stuffed with smooth farmer cheese, refried in butter and topped with bright raspberry preserves. Abraham's potato latkes ($8) are fried cakes of shredded potatoes, outwardly crisp and tender within, frankly the best hash browns in the city, served with sour cream and applesauce. Duck kreplach ($7) tops fried, duck-stuffed triangular wontons with a bit of sinus-clearing grated horseradish. Schmaltz, the clarified fat produced by rendering chicken skin, is like a paler, more heavenly version of butter, thickly smeared on rye toast ($7) and topped with parsley leaves, pickled shallots and briny capers. The similarly swoony byproduct of schmaltz-making is gribenes ($6), a tall heap of crisp-fried chicken skin with tender fried onions mixed in—like the best parts of well-fried chicken wings. Chopped chicken liver ($8) is fabulous: darker and funkier than most versions, served in a crock under more schmaltz and gribenes.

The "appetizing deli" portion of the menu—fish and dairy served with breads—features particularly beautiful smoked and/or pickled fish served with classic accoutrements of cream cheese, capers and sliced red onions, cucumbers and tomatoes. Mamaleh's makes its own gorgeous, delicately brined, thinly sliced salmon lox ($14) and a slightly sweet, chunky pickled herring ($11) with sour cream; it uses a quality outside purveyor for its thicker-sliced smoked sable ($20). Terrific in-house renditions of the accompanying boiled-and-baked bagel or baked-only bialy (the bagel's hole-free sibling, topped with savory dollops like diced onions or tiny tomatoes) are a huge plus.

Sandwiches evoke NYC destination delis like Katz's but with less wretched excess, building on superb in-house hot corned beef ($12 small, $24 groaningly large), rather thickly cut hot pastrami ($12/$24) and cold tongue ($12) served with mustard on great rye bread from Hyannis' Pain d'Avignon boulangerie. Another famed New York deli gets a nod with the Barney Greengrass ($16), which layers smoked sturgeon, cream cheese, tomato and cucumber on an onion bialy. Sides are all very good, as in a sweet-spiced, cornflake-topped, past al-dente noodle kugel ($6), potato salad ($5) and a pickle plate ($5). Specials include a stunning smoked and perfectly roasted salmon collar ($14), a honey-horseradish glaze slicking its chewy skin.

Co-owner/pastry chef Rachel Sundet's desserts are similarly traditional and nostalgically note-perfect, as in the chocolate-swirled, eggy cake that is babka ($2.75), tall chocolate layer cake ($6), firm and not-too-sweet NY-style cheesecake with strawberry-rhubarb preserves ($5.50) and sublime rugelach ($4), rolled flaky-dough cookies with chocolate or raspberry-walnut filling. There's also an inventive drinks program by co-owners/bar managers Heather Mojer and Evan Harrison, including a vivid housemade celery soda ($4), chocolate egg cream ($4.50)—think carbonated, foamy chocolate milk with a pretzel-rod stirrer for a sweet/salty hit—and high-quality Barrington drip coffee ($2.50). Yiddish-accented craft cocktails include the Moravian ($12) of slivovitz, Becherovka bitters and vermouth, complemented by boozy soda-fountain variants like aged rum and chocolate phosphate ($10). A short, basic wine list boasts nice prices ($7-$11/glass, most $40-$60/bottle), while a 17-deep beer and cider list ($4-$13.75) focuses on Central and Eastern European styles like the food-friendly Polish lager Okocim O.K. Beer ($4).

The sunny, tall-ceilinged room is centered on a 20-seat bar backed by an open kitchen and surrounded by 80 dining-room seats, flanked by a takeout deli counter and small retail market; it's bustling and comfortably noisy. Co-owners Rachel Miller Munzer, Alon Munzer and John Kessen help the cheery waitstaff keep the crowds turning over smoothly. In a time when the storied Jewish deli tradition is ebbing, hobbled by rising costs and kids who no longer want to run the family business—and especially in Boston, which hasn't had an outstanding example of it in living memory—Mamaleh's is an extraordinary gift to Jews and gentiles alike. ◆

Q: WHAT IS MICRO-NEEDLING AND WHAT IS IT USED FOR?

A: Micro-needling is a new innovation in aesthetic medicine used to refresh and revitalize the skin. Micro-needling will improve the skin's tone, texture and color; reduce the appearance of fine lines; and even improve acne scars.

During this procedure, a pen-like device is used that has multiple tiny needles that create micro punctures that are not visible to the naked eye. These punctures stimulate the skin to produce new collagen and elastin resulting in younger and healthier-looking skin.

In addition, as the pen glides over the treatment area, topical serums are applied and will be absorbed deep into the skin due to the micro channels created by the needling process.

There will be an immediate glow to the skin and visible changes to the skin develop over several weeks as collagen production continues. Our clients have been thrilled with their results!

LITTLE BIG MAN

JENKINS' QUIETLY DEVASTATING DRAMA OF SELF-DISCOVERY IS ONE OF THE YEAR'S BEST.

I'd been anticipating Barry Jenkins' sophomore film, having long remembered the small pleasures of his promising debut as a writer/director, the romantic drama Medicine for Melancholy, which played as part of 2008's Independent Film Festival Boston. As enjoyable as that little-seen feature was, however, it barely prepared me for the power of his latest picture, Moonlight, a drama spread across three distinct acts, each focused on the same character, first as a child (Alex R. Hibbert), then a teen (Ashton Sanders) and finally a man (Trevante Rhodes). Each chapter of this story would function as a strong short film if viewed independently. But the cumulative effect might just blindside you.

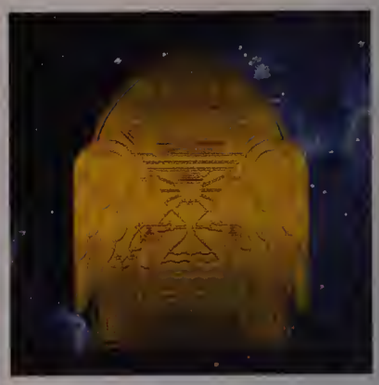
Jenkins introduces us to Little (Hibbert) when he's a poor black youth living in Miami's Liberty City housing projects. This isn't the glowing neon heaven that we're used to seeing in the movies; it's a place that Jenkins knows intimately. He grew up here, as did Tarell Alvin McCraney, whose autobiographical play, In Moonlight Black Boys Look Blue, Jenkins has rearranged and used as the jumping-off point for his script. But before we meet Little, Jenkins and his indispensable cinematographer, James Laxton (whose monochromatic work on Medicine for Melancholy has blossomed into a rich and colorful palette here), pan their camera around Juan (Mahershala Ali from Netflix's Luke Cage), a local drug dealer who will become a major influence on Little's life.

When Little is chased by neighborhood bullies into a "dope hole," Juan rescues the introverted 9-year-old from the dilapidated old building, offering to buy the boy lunch. Gradually, Juan and his girlfriend Teresa (R&B singer Janelle Monáe in a strong acting debut) become surrogate parents to Little, who only has one friend his own age, Kevin (Jaden Piner). This doesn't sit well with Paula (a stunning Naomie Harris), Little's single mother, an addict who's hooked on the junk that Juan peddles. Paula struggles to be a good parent, but she can't help taking out the resentment she feels toward Juan and Teresa on her quiet, "different" child.

Exactly how different, we're about to discover, as Little breaks his usual silence just long enough to ask Juan, "What's a faggot?" Calmly and without judgment, Juan explains, "It's a word people use to make gay people feel bad." The boy then inquires, "Am I a faggot?" Juan warmly replies, "You might be gay, but you're not a faggot. At some point," he continues, "you gotta decide for yourself who you wanna be."

Each chapter of this story would function as a strong short film if viewed independently.

The second act jumps ahead as we view Little as a high school student now going by his given name, Chiron (Sanders). He's still being bullied, not only by Terrel (Patrick Decile), the school hooligan, but also by his mother, whose drug use has spiraled out of control. Occasionally—and to great effect—Jenkins uses the elegant string music of composer Nicholas Britell to drown out all other sounds, including Paula's rage as she screams at her passive son, who's having a very bad day when we first see him as a teenager. Nightfall improves things, however, as Chiron sits alone at his favorite spot on the beach where Juan once taught him to swim. Soon, he's surprised to be joined by Kevin (now played by Jharrel Jerome), who sits on the sand beside him and offers him a drag on his blunt. As the two sit and smoke under the moonlight, the stage is set for some teenage experimentation, and Chiron's first sexual experience.



His happiness is short-lived, however. The next time he sees Kevin, the object of Chiron's affection is being prodded by Terrel to punch Chiron's "faggot ass." When Terrel and his buddies take over and continue to beat the buckled-over, bleeding Chiron, Britell's score once again overtakes the soundtrack, and you're thankful not to have to listen to the sound of the devastating blows.

When a school administrator unsuccessfully attempts to convince Chiron to identify his attackers, the fragile teen breaks down—until he simply breaks, single-minded in his silent determination to seek surprising, violent revenge against Terrel. In the aftermath, Chiron is taken from school in handcuffs, locking eyes with Kevin for what could be the last time. Once again, the music takes over, only this time, the sound Britell produces is akin to an orchestra warming up—a fitting motif, since Chiron's rebirth in the film's third and final chapter is about to begin.

You may also be surprised by the physical transformation that Chiron has undertaken when next we see him. Now an adult living in Atlanta, he's known as "Black," the nickname Kevin gave him when they were children. Black's once-fragile frame has bulked up and hardened—but his heart and mind may not have followed suit, as we discover when a call wakes him in the middle of the night. The voice on the other end of the phone belongs to Kevin, who's played in a tremendously warm, delicate performance by André Holland (of Cinemax's The Knick). This short conversation, filled with more pregnant pauses than dialogue, will set Black toward an oceanside date with fate, under the glow of the moonlight that illuminates the place where he finally embraces who he wants to be—and the boy finally becomes a man. Bring tissues. ◆

ST. PAUL & THE BROKEN BONES play Royale on Nov. 5–6.

Music / Paul Robicheau

SHAKE THEM BONES

AN ALABAMA RETRO-SOUL PREACHER FINDS A BROADER PALETTE AND PURPOSE.

When the spirit moves Paul Janeway, watch out. "I tell security at every show, 'Look, I know this is weird, but I don't know what I'm going to do,'" says the frontman for retro-soul outfit St. Paul & the Broken Bones. "It's more like Iggy and the Stooges than James Brown in that sense... if you're singing a song about heartache and sadness, your body should react to it."

At the recent Austin City Limits Festival, that meant rolling around on his back, crawling under the drum riser, breaching the security pit and—for his first time ever—crowd-surfing. "For some reason I jumped off a 9-foot stage," the 33-year-old singer says. "I could have broken something. I don't know if it's about the performance or getting close to people, but it varies from night to night."

Physical manifestations aside, Janeway mainly surprises people when they hear his soaring, full-throated voice, which recalls R&B-soul shouters like Otis Redding and Percy Sledge, not the spectacled white guy they see onstage.

If the besuited singer looks more like a CPA than a rock star, that's not far off the mark. Janeway studied accounting in college before pursuing music with his Alabama buddies. He'd grown up singing in church but didn't even get onstage with a band until his early 20s. "People were like 'Oh!' And I thought, 'Oh, maybe I'm pretty good,'" Janeway says from his Birmingham home. "[I looked at] people's faces. They were paying attention. So it just kind of snowballed from there."

"There's not a lot of answers on this record. It is a little more bleak than I am as a person."

St. Paul & the Broken Bones forged a surprise smash with their 2014 debut Half the City, inspired by soul icons like Redding and Sam Cooke that Janeway heard alongside gospel while being raised in a strict religious household.

Their second album, Sea of Noise, released in September, tweaks the band's palette beyond the retro, drawing on influences from Prince to Portishead to John Barry, known for his vintage James Bond soundtracks. "Flow with It (You Got Me Feeling Like)" percolates with congas and slinky horns, while "Midnight on the Earth" adds funky chops and chants, plus a synthesizer break before its orchestral swell.

In turn, Janeway changes up his vocals, letting his falsetto fly. "The last [album], it was all about just going at it a million miles an hour," he says. "What you realize is you have to explore more nuance and ways to approach singing. I'm still kind of discovering my voice."

Sea of Noise signals that shakeup from the hymn-like prelude of "Crumbling Light Posts," inspired by a Winston Churchill quote about England being a crumbling lighthouse in a sea of darkness. Other songs mull darker territory, asking how to decide what's right in a world that's wrong. "That's my daddy with a gun, shooting someone else's son... a bullet with intent for the color of his savior," Janeway sings in "Brain Matter," posing the question "Can we find love in a black hole?"

"It's kind of this exploration of Southern identity in modern times," says Janeway, who brings the Broken Bones to Royale on Nov. 5 and 6. "There's not a lot of answers on this record. It is a little more bleak than I am as a person."

The band's ascent has been an adjustment for his parents as well. His father told him that if the music fell through, he could still have a job at the construction and paving company. "I knew I wanted to do music, but that's not realistic. A lot of people want to do music," Janeway says. "It's been a process. My mom doesn't like the cursing. She says, 'You keep St. Paul onstage and don't bring him around me.'"

So he's not an accountant—or a preacher, which was what Janeway initially saw as his calling. "I'm a fairly liberal guy, and where I grew up, that's kind of frowned upon," he says. "I just fell out of love with [the church], but I realized that I have genuinely loved the performance aspect. I enjoy being like a conduit to move people and extract emotion out of people. And that's what I do for a living." ◆

HOW TO VOTE

DON'T KNOW ANYTHING ABOUT POLITICS? THAT'S WHAT THE INTERNET IS FOR.

IT'S ALMOST ELECTION DAY, WHICH MEANS that you probably have a lot of questions about voting. Like "How do I vote? Where do I go? How many times can I vote?" Well, we'll get to that. The important thing is to get out there and participate in democracy! I don't care who you vote for, just as long as you vote. OK, yes I do. But I'm not supposed to say that. I'm just supposed to tell you that voting is good, so go ahead and cast your ballot, you ignorant swine.

First, you need to register. You can do this by mail or maybe when you get your license renewed or something. Nobody's really sure, but the important thing is that you did, somehow. To vote, you must be older than 18 but younger than deceased and not in jail. It's an inclusive process that has come a long way since the founding of the Commonwealth, when voting was restricted to fishmongers named Theodore. (Hence the early law, still on the books but seldom enforced, requiring citizens to greet one another with a hearty "Hail Ted!" and an offer of fresh scrod.)

Now that you're registered, evidently, you need to find your local polling location. Voting always takes place in glamorous venues. It's almost like going on vacation, if you vacation in abandoned DMV offices. Locations will vary by precinct, so you'll need to check to see whether you're voting in the high school boiler room or the oil-change pit at your local public works department.

You'll know you've found your polling place when you see people outside trying to convince you to vote for their chosen candidates by giving you valuable gifts, such as nail files emblazoned with campaign logos. They'll also hand you leaflets listing all the candidates on their side, so a fun thing to do is to take that leaflet and say, "Thanks for telling me who NOT to vote for, you idiots!" You should do this even if those are the people you're going to vote for, just to teach them a lesson about the vagaries of democracy and the ineffectiveness of leaflets.

Once inside, you'll have to make up your mind. There will be two main choices, plus maybe a third or a fourth choice if you're feeling sassy. A bit of electoral trivia: In the 2000 presidential election, thousands of Floridians voted for a manatee named "Ralph Nader."

But you're not just voting for presidents and senators and, for some reason, sheriffs. You might be surprised, but there are other people running for other things, too! This will make you feel bad, because you really don't know anything about those people. It seems wrong not to cast a vote, but there's also the chance that you make an ill-informed vote and help elect a dogcatcher who spends more time cozying up to the powerful dog-catching lobby than out roaming the streets with his net. The solution is to frantically Google each candidate from the voting booth, to see if they've done anything to float your boat or chafe your britches. For instance, if you're voting in the Eighteenth Middlesex District, you might look up state Rep. Rady Mom and learn that he co-sponsored a bill to punish people who drive too slowly (MA H.1511, "An Act Relative to Impeding the Flow of Traffic on Public Ways"). That is awesome and I'd expand it to make monster trucks street legal, but it's a good start.

The ballot will also include referendums. Referendums are questions that the voters decide. They're always clearly worded. Like "Do you not un-support un-outlawing recreational marijuana use, per se?" That's one of the questions this year. Another concerns slot machines. I didn't know much about that one, so I consulted the most reliable news source at my disposal: Facebook. There, my friend Craig wrote, "If your Aunt Nancy wants to smoke lung rockets, pee in a cup and win nine bucks on the loosest slots in Everett, who am I to deny her the pleasure? Vote yes." Craig is verily the Thomas Paine of Holliston. But if you don't have a friend who knows things, you can always make your decisions based on political ads. You should have done this a minimum of six months ago.

Political ads can even be referendums themselves, in a way. Scott Brown's first Senate campaign was, more than anything, a referendum on barn coats. He stood there and asked the people of Massachusetts, "Can I still wear this? And if so, can I wear it in Washington?" Well, guess what? We still liked barn coats! I wear mine with a crisply ironed pair of dungarees.

When you're done voting, you go home and await the results. Maybe things turned out the way you'd hoped. Maybe they didn't. The important thing to remember is that we're all Americans. So go greet your neighbor, the one with the lawn signs that you kept vandalizing, and make amends. Say "Hail, Ted!" and offer some scrod. Or else. ◆

It's almost like going on vacation, if you vacation in abandoned DMV offices.

SOUND ADVICE ON TRADING UP, TRADING STOCKS AND TRADING HOMES

JOHN D. SPOONER IS AN INVESTMENT ADVISER, author and novelist. His most recent book is No One Ever Told Us That: Money and Life Lessons for Young Adults. Here, he responds to queries from advice seekers of all ages. Send your conundrums to thedance@improper.com.

My wife and I received a crepe maker for a gift. Honestly, an electric crepe maker. I had no idea such a useless appliance existed. I hate it and I will never use it. Never. Ever. Here's the problem: It is worth a lot of money. I want to return it to the store and get something we could really use, but my wife wants to keep it as it was from her aunt. By the way, I do like crepes. I just don't see the need for an electric crepe maker—or, another way to put it, a dust collector. Every home has dust collectors. I have a pasta maker from the early 1980s, when it was all the rage. It got great use for three months. I open other cabinets in my kitchen and pantry and see implements for juicing oranges and lemons, hard-boiled egg slicers, multiple martini shakers, ashtrays for cigars, egg beaters, waffle irons. Someday, before they get recycled or taken to the dump, I'll paint a watercolor still-life of all the extraneous junk in my life.

Exchange the crepe maker for some great, useful pots and pans. Whenever you use them, which will be a lot, you'll think of your aunt. And write her a great thank you note. She'll never look in your cupboards anyway.

I have a retirement plan at work. And I inherited stocks from family—old-time so-called blue chips that I haven't touched. I kind of need the dividends they provide. But I'm terrified about the news and elections, and a lot of people, including friends, tell me that they're selling everything before it all goes down. Any sanity to share? At home, I have a coffee table book compiling the front pages of The New York Times from the 1920s to the mid-'80s. If you take a letter opener, insert it anywhere into the book and flip it open, you will find two things: Every administration that's in power is the worst ever, and the world is always totally going to hell. I often preach, "Don't be a headline reader," because, very often, what really happens is the opposite of what is trumpeted in the media. Markets do move on emotion, on fear and greed. But market panics usually come from events that no one saw coming, that no one predicted—the "black swan" effect.

With your retirement account, take advantage of dollar cost averaging. This means that since you invest every year, your investment choices could be up or down, depending on market swings. For instance, if you bought a mutual fund at $10, and the next year it's selling at $8, buy some more, which will bring down your average cost. That's the concept of dollar cost averaging. And if the times seem to be fearful, that's a much better time to invest for the long term than when people are optimistic and even greedy.

Many of these blue chips have probably stood the test of time, come back from every bump in the economic road and ended up higher. Our people are much better than our politicians. Stay with the great companies, and trust in American ingenuity and resilience.

You can hate politics. But if you're patient, you can love your stocks.

I'm a little older than the Improper demographic, and we live in the suburbs. Our kids are just about out of college (and we're praying they don't bounce back to live with us). We're thinking of moving into the city and downsizing. What do you think of the timing for this move? It's always a good thing to reinvent yourself, particularly in marriage or in any long-term relationship. Downsizing your prime residence can be tricky, however. Currently, in my opinion, Boston real estate—especially on the higher end—is in somewhat of a bubble, and, as we all know, it's a very expensive city. Unless you're going to be a certain kind of suburban pioneer and move to East Boston, knowing it will be the next Southie, in terms of creeping gentrification.

You can hate politics. But if you're patient, you can love your stocks.

Many people are moving into town from western suburbs, thinking they'll be able to sock something away after selling the big house and moving to a smaller space. Many times, however, the move will suck up all the money you thought you'd save, as you almost always underestimate the costs of moving into and restoring your new dwelling.

All this being said, you probably will never see mortgage rates cheaper in your lifetime, and it's a great time to borrow money if you need to. And you will soak in the city experience and the new adventures you will have.

So if you're counting on life being cheaper than in the suburbs, forget it. But if you fall in love with the urban energy and you fall in love with each other in a fresh way, that's priceless. ◆

THE BOSTON PRIDE CHAMP SOUNDS OFF ON SKATING WITH THE BOYS, OLYMPIC GLORY AND GREAT GLUTES

TWO-TIME OLYMPIC SILVER MEDALIST AND SIX-TIME world champion Hilary Knight, 27, plays forward for the Boston Pride. Born in Palo Alto and raised in Chicago, she went to the University of Wisconsin, where she was a three-time All-American, winning one national title and setting the school's all-time record for goals scored. She has played for the U.S. in eight world championships, winning gold six times, and was named MVP each of the past two years. The team's youngest player in the 2010 Olympics, she tallied seven assists and one goal while earning a silver medal. In the 2014 Olympics, she tied for the team lead with six points while again earning a silver medal. She was drafted by the Boston Blades of the CWHL in 2012 and emerged as the league MVP while helping the Blades win the Clarkson Cup. After joining the Boston Pride of the NWHL in September 2015, she led the team to an Isobel Cup championship as co-captain and became the league's leading scorer in its inaugural season.

JONATHAN SOROFF: So what do people say when you tell them you're a professional hockey player?
HILARY KNIGHT: "Oh, that's nice. I would never have guessed that."

Does women's hockey get the respect it deserves? Absolutely not.

Is it as rough as men's hockey? It is as physical, but in different ways. It's a very highly skilled game, and there definitely is a lot of physicality and body contact. When people hear "women's hockey," I think they assume it's less physical, and that's hardly the case.

Would you go up against any of the Bruins? Absolutely. Bring it on.

Worst injury you've had? Worst in terms of pain was probably when I tore my ACL. It was just a few weeks before the 2010 Olympic games. A little minor setback just before the biggest opportunity in your life and your career. But what kept me off the ice for longer was hip surgery.

So why don't you have teeth missing, like a lot of NHL players? I protect my teeth. We wear a full cage. But when I'm playing with the guys or my brothers, I don't, so maybe I'm just lucky. It's a risk you run playing with hard flying objects. My mom is very proud of the fact that I have all my teeth.

Most unconventional use you've made of a hockey stick? One time I delivered sausage patties for a commercial photo shoot, and I had to chop up eggs and shoot 'em at people. But hockey sticks are also very useful to get things off of high shelves.

Where do you keep your Olympic medals? Under my bed. I don't know that I should be telling you that. They used to be in the bank, but you want to share them with everybody, so I needed to have them accessible.

What body part on hockey players is better than everybody else's? We've got buns of steel. Actually, all-around, people are looking pretty good in our sport.

"When people hear 'women's hockey,' I think they assume it's less physical, and that's hardly the case."

Favorite winter sport town? Sun Valley, hands down. I just got back. It's so gorgeous, I already want to go back, but I had to come back to the real world.

Do you somehow know you have a goal before the puck goes in? That's a great question. Sometimes, yes. And sometimes, it's just a good bounce or whatever. People say that goal scorers have sort of a natural touch, but sometimes I am very surprised with myself and how certain things get to the back of the net.

What's the best thing about competing in the Olympics? Oh, my gosh. So many. Feeling like a kid again. And knowing that for however many weeks you are exactly where you want to be. There's nowhere else you'd rather be, and you're in the moment. Plus, you get to share it with your closest friends and family, along with the rest of the world. That's pretty cool.

How about the worst part? The worst part is losing on a world stage like that. You lose, but it's not just you; it's your whole country and everybody else who was rooting for you. You can't bring home a medal.

What's the biggest physical challenge you have in your sport or as a pro athlete? Definitely skating backward. Forwards don't skate backward that often, so that would be the transition that's the most challenging. As soon as I finish this interview, I'm going to work on that so no one gets the jump on me. [Laughs.]

Most uncomfortable piece of equipment? Probably the garter belt. There's these little things that attach your hockey socks to your shin pads to hold everything in place. Part is metal, and if you put them on the wrong way, you can be sitting on the bench and it just jams into you. The other thing is, whenever you get new equipment, it's the worst to break it in.

Most important piece of protective equipment? My helmet. I fall, so protecting the head is sort of major. But I'd say almost everything. You're skating super fast, faster than you can run, on an ice sheet, with boards surrounding you.

Do you see yourself as a trailblazer? I don't know. Sometimes, when I sit back and contemplate things, I get some perspective. But in other ways, I'm just building upon what came before me and trying to contribute in some way. I hope I can look back and say, "That's awesome that I could do that for whoever comes next." But right now, I'm just trying to have fun.

How messy is the team's locker room? Ours? It's pristine and completely clean. Our equipment manager takes great pride in making sure everything is just so. Everyone hangs up their equipment the same way, in the same order. When we leave the locker room, it looks exactly the same as when we walked in. It's his expertise, and we try to be respectful of that.

So what does life after hockey look like? Oh, my gosh. I have no idea. I think finding another passion that can ignite my inner flame the way hockey does. I understand that I can't play forever, so I guess it will be anything I can find as much joy in. ◆

9 reasons to get pumped for the snowy season

BY THE IMPROPER STAFF

Winter Warmer

New Hampshire's Omni Mount Washington Resort takes après-ski tippling seriously—so much so that the team traveled 1,000 miles in pursuit of its new signature bourbon. Released this summer after a successful launch of an inaugural blend in 2014, Mount Washington Woodford Reserve II features hints of brown sugar, maple and vanilla, tastes chosen when staff traveled from Bretton Woods to the Kentucky distillery to work with Woodford Reserve's master taster. "After tasting each barrel individually, we compared notes and discussed which two barrels we thought would be interesting to blend," explains Robert Hunt, the resort's assistant director of food and beverage. "In the end, we chose a blend that consisted of the two barrels with the most subtle presentation of flavors." Guests can try bourbon from one of the batch's 180 bottles on the rocks or in signature cocktails like the Elevation, made with New Hampshire maple syrup and lemon, or the Blueberry French Toast Martini. "A glass of Mount Washington Woodford Reserve on the veranda, overlooking New Hampshire's beautiful Presidential mountain range, is an extremely unique experience," Hunt says. "Amazing view, amazing bourbon." / Meghon Kavanaugh

MOUNTING AN EXPEDITION—AND AN EXHIBITION

True adventurers can experience "the world's worst weather" with a trek to New Hampshire's Mount Washington Observatory, which offers day and overnight snowcat trips and guided climbs to a peak where winter conditions can rival those of the poles. But views of New England's highest summit are easier to come by at Manchester's Currier Museum of Art, where newly opened exhibit Mount Washington: The Crown of New England is on display through Jan. 16. The show gathers 40 paintings—including Albert Bierstadt's massive 1870 work The Emerold Pool, pictured here—as well as 100 vintage prints and photos, scientific reports, period guidebooks and other artifacts relating to the mountain. Head online for deets on special events, including an after-hours celebration on Dec. 1 and a Dec. 11 talk with author Tom Ryan, whose book Following Atticus chronicles his experience climbing 48 Granite State peaks with his canine companion. / Jocqueline Houton

SNOW SCREEN

After picking up his first 8mm movie camera in 1946, Warren Miller could hardly put it down. From 1950 till 2004, he produced a feature-length ski film every year, bringing screenings to dozens of cities as an official kickoff to each snowy season. But the pioneering director hasn't been involved with the franchise that bears his name in the dozen years since. That changes with the release of Here, There & Everywhere, which features new interviews with the 92-year-old, along with jaw-dropping feats of skiing, snowboarding, dog-sledding, snowmobiling, pond skimming and more. See the Swiss Alps, Montana glaciers and even a cameo by Fenway Park—host of last February's Big Air competition—on screen at the Berklee Performance Center on Nov. 5 and at the Somerville Theatre on Nov. 16 and 17. / Jacqueline Houton

Serious Slope Style

Louis Joseph has sped down mountains around the world, but he took a particularly daring leap in late 2014, leaving his job as global director of strategy and innovation for PUMA to found alpine sportswear line Alps & Meters. The Boston-based men's brand has been selling its wares online and in a handful of stores in spots like Vail and Stowe; now they can also be found at a new pop-up shop, an intimate space near Fenway. It's open through the end of the year for shopping and special events, like a screening of the Robert Redford drama Downhill Racer that helped inspire Alps & Meters' new Classic Shell Jacket. We tapped Joseph to learn a little more about the line. / Jacqueline Houton

HOW DID THE IDEA FOR ALPS & METERS START? I've skied all over the world, and the genesis for the brand was an old knitwear piece that I've worn in Argentina, in Jackson Hole, Wyoming, places in Europe. Wherever I went, people would pull me aside in the lift lines and the ski lodge to ask about that particular garment. It got incredibly consistent to the point where I felt like "Somebody should build something like this."

WHERE DID YOU FIND IT? I bought that in Åre, Sweden. It's a northern resort in Sweden, a well-known destination among skiers. I bought it in an old thrift store there. It's a proper ski sweater. Rarely are people knitting garments nowadays. Everything is very synthetic. We're knitting the piece that was derived from that sweater, which is called the Shawl Collar Jacket. But the original is buried somewhere in my ski closet. I've probably had that sweater now for 10 or 15 years. I bet it would still hold up if I brought it out and dusted it off, but now I've got plenty of Alps & Meters to do that particular job.

WHAT'S YOUR FAVORITE PIECE FROM THE NEW FALL/WINTER COLLECTION? My favorite piece is the Alpine Winter Trouser. It's a personal favorite of mine because there's no other pant like it in the market. If you can bring to mind an old tailored ski pant with wonderful paper characteristics, woolen-face fabric, a beautiful traditional suspender kit, and bundle that with today's contemporary technology, I think that describes the product we produced. That piece really resonates with me and captures the personality of the brand. But the favorite of our digital director is our Alpine Anorak, which is inspired by garments worn by the 10th Mountain Division in World War II.

WHAT ARE SOME OF YOUR FAVORITE PLACES TO SKI? I grew up skiing in North Conway, New Hampshire. I have a real affinity for very traditional mountain environments. I cut my teeth and learned my pizza wedge at places like Cranmore and Attitash. I spent a lot of time at Sugarbush here on the East Coast and plenty of time on the snow on mountains like Alta and Jackson Hole. It's hard to be East Coast and not put Cannon or places in Vermont like Stowe at the top of our list, but I think out west it's sort of a Jackson Hole, Alta universe in Utah for me. It sounds corny to say, but I love every place I ski. I'm not the hard-charging soul I used to be. I just love being in the mountains. If I'm with good friends and there's good snow—I'm not a snow snob—it's a slice of heaven for me.

Getting an Edge on the Competition

Forget hot cocoa. Some stiff competition will heat up the slopes at Killington on Nov. 26-27, when the Vermont resort hosts the Audi FIS Ski World Cup—the first time a World Cup event has been held on the East Coast since 1991. The weekend's festivities include a free concert by O.A.R., and it's also free to watch the races, which are set to draw members of the U.S Ski Team, like the New Hampshire-bred Mikaela Shiffrin. We checked in with Shiffrin, 21, for some pro tips about the competition and her old shredding grounds. / Alexandra Cavallo

WHAT HAS YOU MOST EXCITED ABOUT RACING AT KILLINGTON? I've heard that it starts steep and has some false flats, so you think you're in the clear but you're not. It's going to be tough; that's what I know about it. But I'm excited for the challenge of the hill. I'm excited to go to a new venue that nobody has been to, because a lot of venues that are new to me—even five years into the World Cup—a lot of the other girls have been to. I like the feeling of competing at home. Because I feel like the crowd is really cheering for me.

YOU'VE SKIED KILLINGTON RECREATIONALLY IN THE PAST—WHAT DO YOU LIKE MOST ABOUT IT? This is weird, but I remember this awesome waffle house at the bottom of the gondola. I got this waffle and I went up the gondola, and I was like "Oh my God, I have chocolate on my waffle—this is great!" [Laughs.]

WHAT WERE SOME OF YOUR FAVORITE PLACES TO SKI GROWING UP IN NEW ENGLAND? The ski club I raced with was based off the Dartmouth Skiway in Lyme, New Hampshire, which is the town that I lived in. That's one of my favorites. ... There's this other little mountain, Storrs Hill, in Lebanon, New Hampshire—it's tiny and has this star at the top of the hill. There's just one palma lift, with ski jumps on the side. So they produce all these great skimeister athletes, because they have ski jumping, Nordic skiing and a training hill. And it's all condensed. There was night skiing and you could always tell you were getting close because you would see the star all lit up with Christmas lights. We would drive after school pretty much every weekday. My brother and I would be sitting in the back of our minivan doing homework, and when we saw the star we'd know we were getting close.

ANY ADVICE FOR A NEW SKIER WHO WANTS TO SKI COMPETITIVELY? Everybody says this, but it's true: It's so important that you try to have fun with it. So many people get so caught up in taking it so seriously—and I'm one of those people. ... But I think there's a time and place for distraction and goofing off and hanging out with your buddies and not thinking of anything productive. And then there's a time that, when you're doing the sport and you want to succeed with it, you do have to put effort into it. You have to be OK with the pain of being the odd man out when there's so much goofing off. You just need to know when to turn it on and off.

Fat Chance

Cold weather enthusiasts looking to keep their winter spare tire at bay can work up a sweat with a fat tire...bike that is. Fat-tire biking is a winter alternative to mountain biking, with tires designed for snow-packed trails that are twice the size of those on a traditional mountain bike. "It's a little slower and much more comfortable," says Kate Boehmer of Maine Huts & Trails, a nonprofit network of backcountry trails and eco-lodges that now offers fat-tire biking. "Think a luxury sedan versus a vintage European race car." However, that's not to say bikers won't get a workout. When asked to describe the experience, Boehmer says, "Combine skiing, biking, dancing, horseback riding and trail running, and you'd be getting close." Maine Huts & Trails boasts a variety of trails for fat-tire biking, many with markers delineating the level of difficulty, not unlike those on the ski slopes. But novices needn't fear if they accidentally find themselves on a slightly advanced trail: "Unlike skiing, it's not really a big deal to end up on a trail you're not quite ready for," Boehmer says. "Unless you've ended up on a serious downhill, simply walk your bike through challenging sections and get back on when you're ready. Worst-case scenario? You're just walking through the woods—and that's pretty awesome." / Alexondro Covollo

Lace Up Your Skates

City Hall Plaza should get a lot cooler this season with the addition of an 11,000-square-foot custom-designed skating path, slated to open after Thanksgiving and operate through February. It's part of the resort's recently unveiled 30,000-square-foot Adventure Center, which also features a canteen, a movie screening area and a kids' ski school, all nestled next to the new Spruce Peak Village Center boasting boutiques, restaurants, private residences and a 10,000-square-foot outdoor ice rink. / Meghan Kavanaugh

CELTICS BY MATT MARTINELLI
& BRUINS BY SARAH HAGMAN

MARCUS SMART

DREAM LINEUP

MARCUS SMART/AVERY BRADLEY/JAE CROWDER/ JAYLEN BROWN/AL HORFORD

Defense! Dee-fense! This lineup's primary strength is defense, with all five of these guys able to guard multiple positions, and some—like Marcus Smart—able to defend all five positions. This lineup has the Celtics' three most well-rounded players in Bradley, Crowder and Horford, so it shouldn't sacrifice offense for defense. It also has Brown, the Celtics' highest draft pick in two decades and a player fans can't wait to see in action.

TERRY ROZIER
Mr. Rozier was born to play for the Celtics. Need proof? He was born on St. Patrick's Day. Need further proof? Just watch his game. In limited minutes at the end of last season, he was a defensive waterbug, hounding opposing guards. Now entering his second season, the 22-year-old appears to have made offensive strides and is being counted on to replace Evan Turner, who left for Portland. If he can prove to be an effective ball handler and a good 3-point shooter, he might end up being the team's best all-around guard. Bonus: He's under team control for many seasons to come.

HOTTEST TICKET

Feb. 5 vs. Los Angeles Clippers

The most in-demand ticket will be the Nov. 18 game against the NBA's latest (and greatest) superteam: the Golden State Warriors. But the Warriors will be the hottest attraction at every arena in the league this season. The Clippers game, however, will be Paul Pierce's final regular season game in Boston, where he played 15 seasons, winning one title and finishing second on the franchise's scoring list. The tears will flow, the Jumbotron tributes will roll and it will be an "Only in Boston" moment.

Mr. Dependable

ISAIAH THOMAS

He's only played 103 games in his regular-season Celtics career, but you know exactly what you're getting from the 5-foot-9-inch guard. He led the Celtics in scoring last season, and you can pencil him in for a team-leading 20-plus points per game again this season. On a team that often lacked for any offense before he arrived, he's been a perfect fit.

NUMBERS GAME

That was the Celtics' 3-point shooting percentage last season, which ranked third worst in the NBA. If the Celtics harbor any hopes of challenging the league's elite teams, they need to improve their long-distance shooting. Connecting on 37 percent of three-pointers would've landed them in the league's Top 5 last season. Consider it a goal to shoot for.

NEW GUY ON THE BLOCK

AL HORFORD

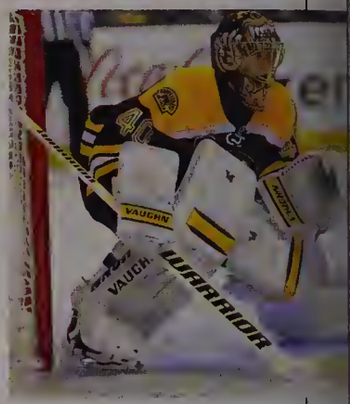
Consider the myth debunked: The Celtics can sign a big-name free agent. The 30-year-old is a four-time All-Star who has been among the league's best defenders and scorers during his nine seasons with the Atlanta Hawks. His credentials are unmatched on this Boston team, and he fills a need for the Celtics as a guy who can play center and power forward. But really, what team doesn't need a big guy who can shoot from long distance and thrives in the pick-and-roll? Every team in the NBA could use a guy like Horford.

THREE BIGGEST CHALLENGES

1. Marcus Smart's Shot: Much ado was made about his new shooting mechanics, but early returns show the same paltry shooting percentage from the 3-point range. If he never fixes his jumper, he risks becoming a defense-only player. He'd still be valuable, but he'd never quite reach the All-Star upside he possesses.

2. Tuning out Trade Rumors: One constant in recent years has been trade rumors, with the Celtics reportedly eyeing superstars such as DeMarcus Cousins and Blake Griffin. That can be a bit disconcerting for the players rumored to be leaving town in those theoretical trades. But the Celtics, under the guidance of Brad Stevens, have been great at ignoring those rumors, and they'll have to keep doing that in a season that will again be full of them.

3. Developing the Youngsters: On a team with championship aspirations, finding enough NBA playing time for rookie Demetrius Jackson and youngsters Jordan Mickey and James Young will be tough. And without playing against NBA-caliber competition, it's even harder for those guys to develop before their original contracts expire.



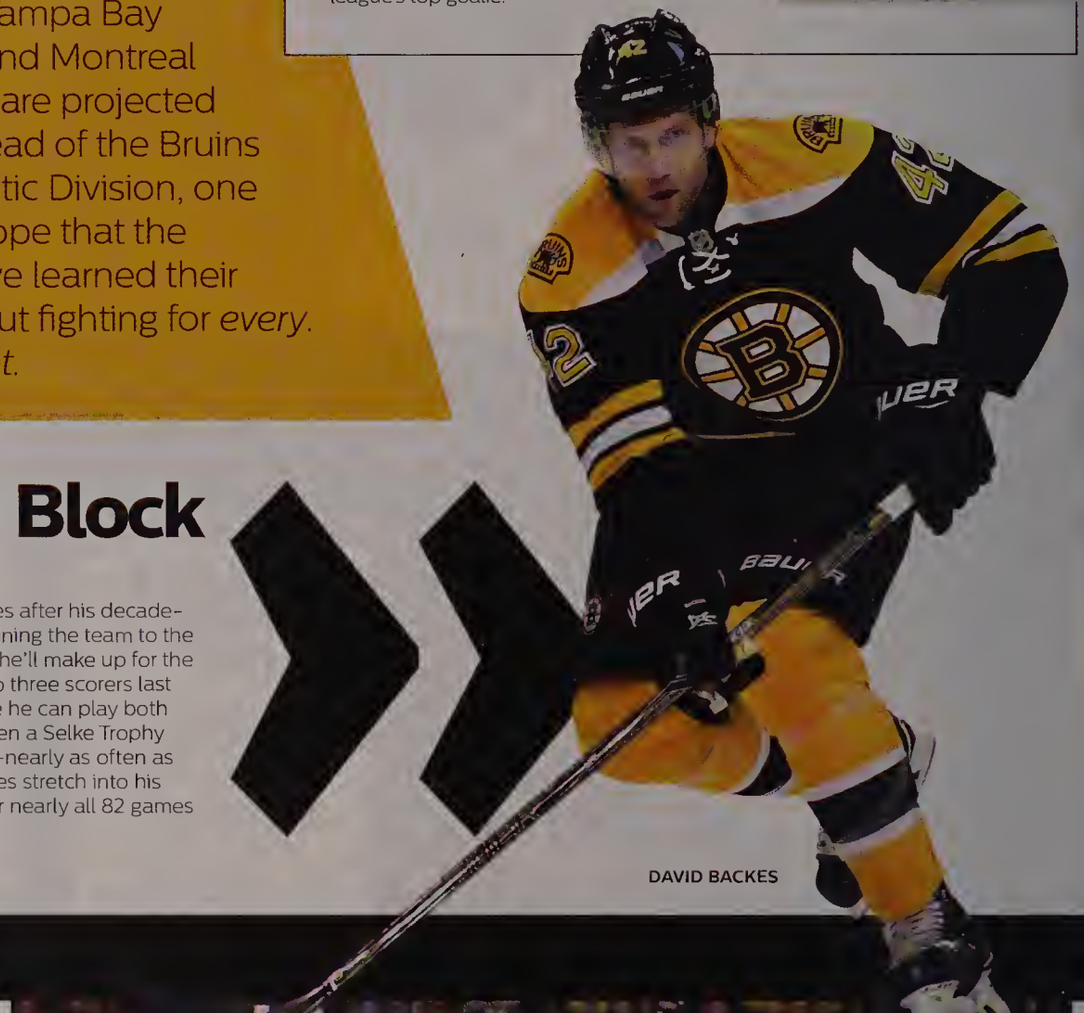
NUMBERS GAME

1 POINT

That was the frustrating margin that kept the Bruins out of the Stanley Cup playoffs last season. In 2015, it was just two points that kept them on the outside looking in. Given that the Florida Panthers, Tampa Bay Lightning and Montreal Canadiens are projected to land ahead of the Bruins in the Atlantic Division, one can only hope that the players have learned their lesson about fighting for every. single. point.

MAN IN THE SPOTLIGHT

TUUKKA RASK



With a sparser defense in front of him, goalie Tuukka Rask will continue to see more action. But in recent seasons, his goals against average has been going up while his save percentage has gone down—bad signs for the team's franchise keeper. Hopefully the return of backup Anton Khudobin will provide some much-needed rest for Rask, keeping him fresher for the duration of the season. For the Bruins to have any shot at playing meaningful games in May (aka, the second round of the playoffs), Rask must return to his 2014 self, when he won the Vezina Trophy as the league's top goalie.

New Guy on the Block

DAVID BACKES

St. Louis has the blues: They said goodbye to David Backes after his decade-long run there, the final five years of which had him captaining the team to the playoffs every season. In Boston, the question is whether he'll make up for the departure of Loui Eriksson, who was one of the team's top three scorers last season. However, Backes also brings some flexibility since he can play both center and right wing, and you can't overlook that he's been a Selke Trophy finalist—awarded to the league's best defensive forward—nearly as often as Patrice Bergeron. The 32-year-old's five-year contract does stretch into his past-prime years, but for what it's worth, he's suited up for nearly all 82 games almost every season of his career.

PLAYER TO WATCH

DAVID PASTRNAK

Now in his third NHL season, David Pastrnak only recently played his 100th game, thanks to multiple injuries that have plagued the former first-round draft pick. With a (fingers crossed) healthy spell and his recent promotion to the first line, expectations are high for the 20-year-old.

DREAM DUO

PATRICE BERGERON/BRAD MARCHAND

As a pair, Patrice Bergeron and Brad Marchand are among the league's most dynamic duos. Bergeron, who centers the top line, wrapped up last season with a career high in goals, while Marchand, his winger and linemate, is coming off an impressive World Cup performance in the preseason, where he bested both Bergeron and league MVP Sidney Crosby in scoring. It wouldn't be unsurprising for the recently re-signed Marchand to surpass last season's 37 tallies, giving just another reason for the Little Ball of Hate's opponents to get their feathers ruffled—or, maybe a reason to finally respect him. No matter what player gets paired on the other side of this line, they'll be a must-watch all season.

BRANDON CARLO

DEFENSE

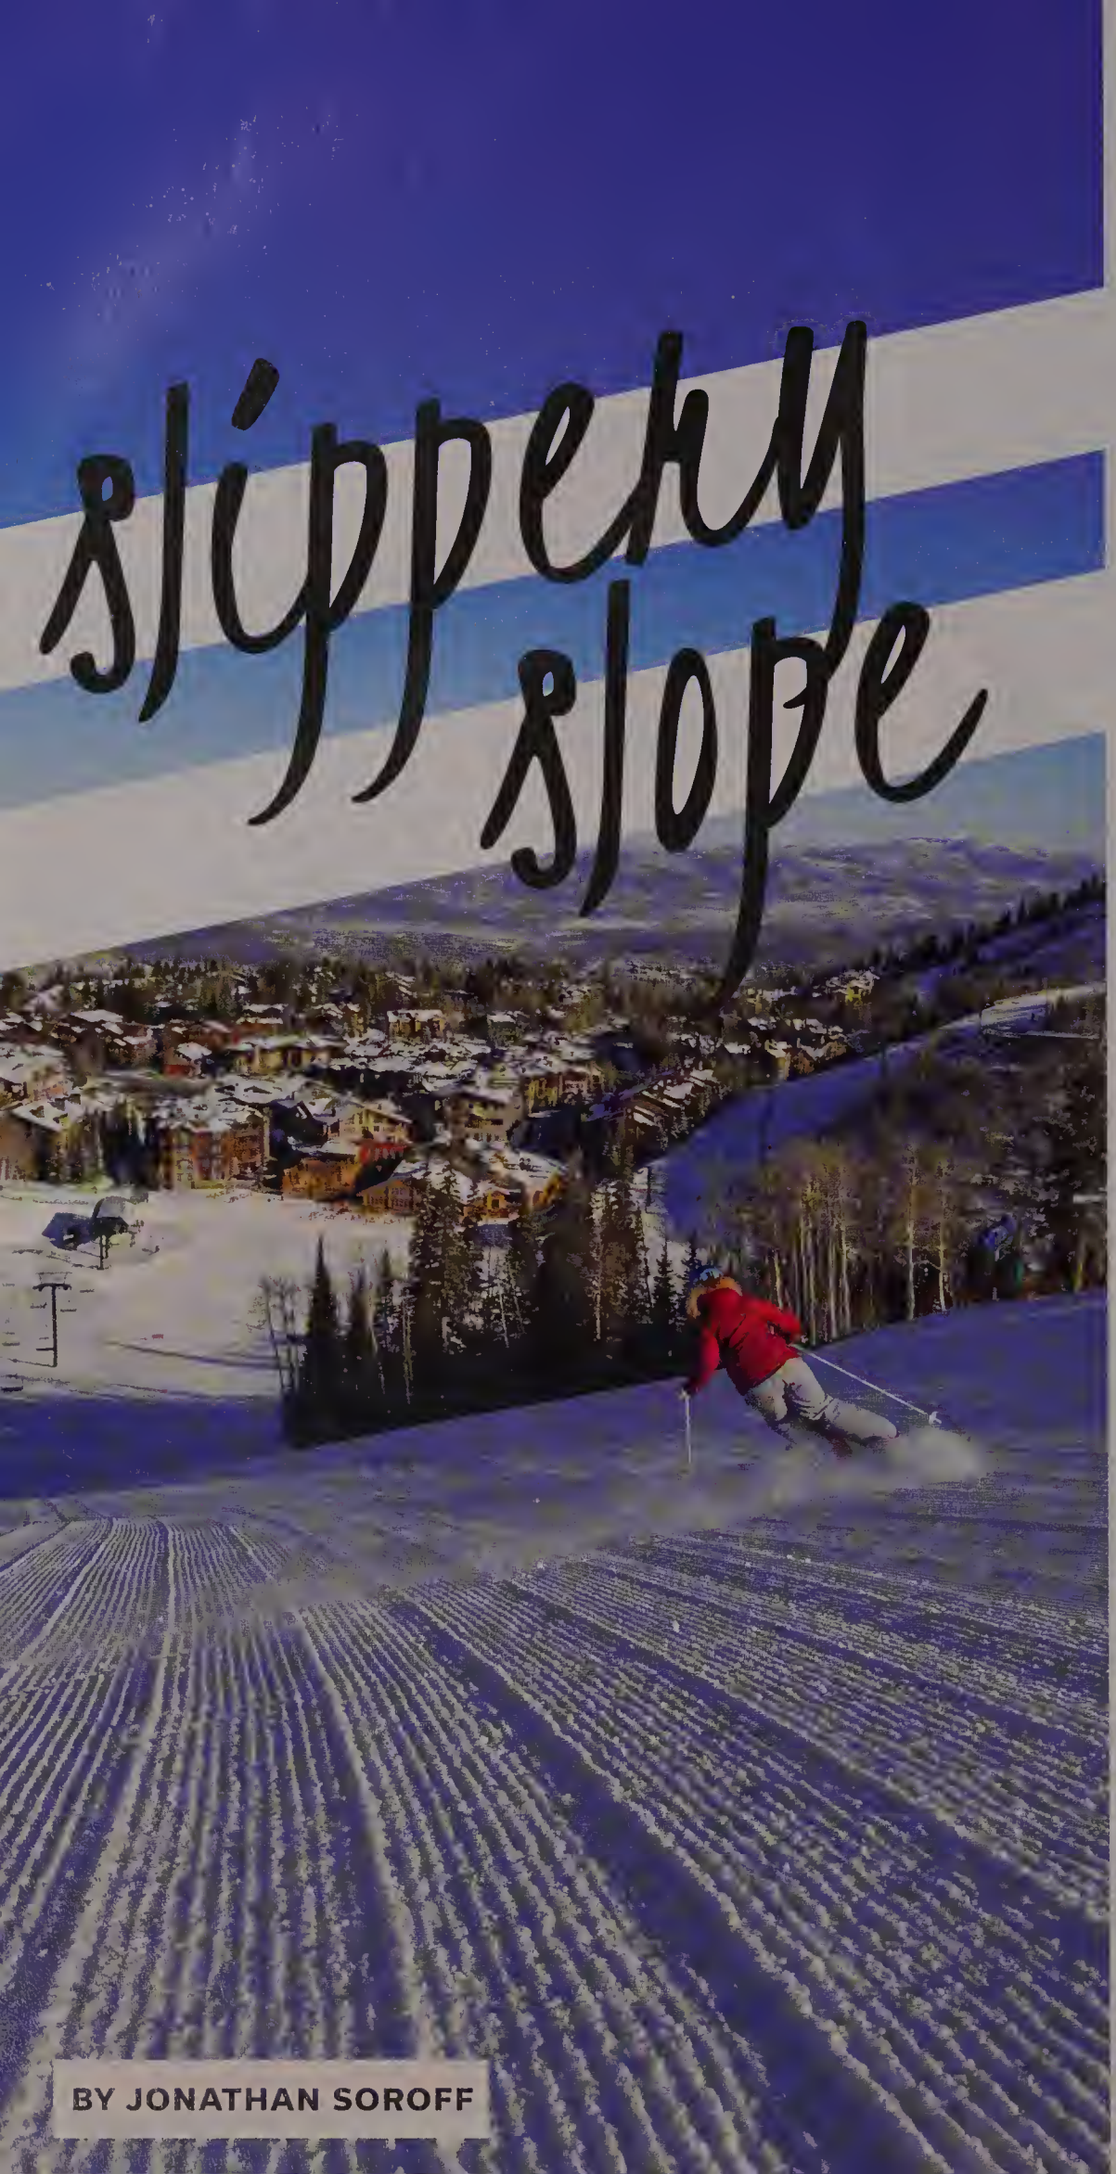
The lack of upgrades in the offseason left a pretty glaring hole on the defensive end, especially since Kevan Miller likely won't return from injury until December. That leaves a lot of young guys—Joe Morrow and Colin Miller among them—who need to play at a high level. For a little perspective on how young the defense is, Zdeno Chara made his NHL debut before his current linemate, 19-year-old Brandon Carlo, even celebrated his first birthday.

HOT TICKETS

Dec. 10 and Feb. 4 vs. Toronto Maple Leafs

This year's Jack Eichel is rookie Auston Matthews, who scored four goals in 40 minutes during his professional debut and then gave the Bruins a scare in just his second pro game.

HOT TICKET



Jan. 26 vs. Pittsburgh Penguins

The defending Stanley Cup champs take the ice with Sidney Crosby, who's proven to be the best player of his generation when healthy.

HOT TICKET

March 28 vs. Nashville Predators

P.K. Subban may no longer be sporting a Canadiens jersey, but something tells us he'll feel right at home in a Garden rife with jeers.

slippery slope

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

I'm a lifelong skier. My husband, Sam, is not. For the first nine years we were together, he gamely joined me for the long slog up to Maine or Vermont and endured snowboarding lessons from a somewhat crazed but endlessly patient English friend who also learned the sport as an adult. Still, going much beyond the bunny slope induced panic, and while Sam enjoys ice skating, snowshoeing and even cross-country skiing, hoisting a cocktail after the lifts closed was the only part of being on the mountain that he really liked. (He was an instant gold medalist in après skiing.)

It's perfectly understandable. It's one thing to start hurtling down a mountain as a 3-year-old with a low center of gravity. It's entirely another to be nearly 6 feet tall, feeling awkward and intimidated, as you try to get down the bunny slope, while a bunch of toddlers hurtle past you at Mach speed, like a barrage of supersonic Skittles.

Add to that the often icy conditions in our neck of the woods, the mediocre food at most New England ski lodges and the prevailing Yankee attitude that amenities are somehow unseemly, that some level of discomfort is necessary to justify anything fun, and I fully appreciate why Sam would routinely say, "It's really beautiful up here, but it just doesn't seem worth all the effort."

> "Skiing and golf," he said. "Two things you never teach your spouse. You hire an instructor and keep your mouth shut."

So last year, we agreed to spend a week in Utah's Deer Valley. I figured that the famously fluffy powder, sunshine (fingers crossed), extensive terrain designed for a beginner and ski-luxe accommodations might finally win him over. He would take ski lessons (since he'd given up on the snowboarding experiment) and not have to deal with intimidating hordes of snowboarders (since Deer Valley, along with Alta and Mad River Glen, is one of the three ski resorts in America that don't allow snowboarding). If he didn't fall in love with it, I agreed I'd never bug him about going skiing again.

We arrived in Salt Lake City on a sunny March afternoon, and after dodging the annoying hordes of bros towing ski bags and large Mormon families welcoming their kids home from their missions, we found our driver, who conveyed us into the Wasatch mountains with an ongoing but entertaining monologue in a luxury SUV. Bonus point: The trip is only 45 minutes.

The Stein Eriksen Lodge was Utah's first Five Star resort and remains one of its most alluring. Named for the late Norwegian ski champion, it's the epitome of tasteful alpine opulence: Think a log cabin on steroids, with amenities you never dreamed existed. Two ice-cold martinis appeared seemingly as soon as we ordered them. Our suite had a kitchen that could produce a Thanksgiving feast, a spacious living room with a fireplace, a bedroom and bathroom you could land a plane in, and a deck with a Jacuzzi looking down the valley toward Park City. Things were off to a good start.

They continued that way as we dined in the award-winning Glitretind Restaurant, where the 10,000-bottle wine cellar gives the lie to Utah's reputation as a place where you can't get a decent drink. The food was superb, and the altitude worked its charm, so that both of us were snoring before we'd even finished our cognac.

Ski rack, ski helmet, ski goggles—all familiar terms. Ski butler? Not so much. But we were eager to learn. After a hearty breakfast watching the visual symphony of a sunrise in the mountains, we went downstairs to what looked like the men's locker room at a 1-percenter's country club. Our ski butler (a studly Argentinian) wedged our feet into our boots, adjusted the buckles and announced that the rest of our equipment was waiting slope-side. Outside, waiting for us, was Sam's instructor—a handsome, laconic local—and my guide, a lovely woman who knew the mountain like the back of her hand. It's a luxury I've rarely experienced but always enjoyed: skiing an unfamiliar mountain without having to consult a trail map. And preferred chairlift access is like being let loose in an amusement park with no lines.

I bid Sam adieu, and we went our separate ways, me remembering the words of a friend I'd once skied with in Sun Valley, Idaho. He'd made the mistake of trying to instruct his beginner wife, and after they'd gotten into a voluble fight in which she used language thoroughly unlike her, he and I went to fetch the car. "Skiing and golf," he said. "Two things you never teach your spouse. You hire an instructor and keep your mouth shut."

Despite the fact that it was spring break week, the slopes were blessedly uncrowded, and although Deer Valley hadn't enjoyed its usual abundance of snowfall, conditions were no less than champagne powder, corduroy or packed powder. Temperatures reached well into the 40s, with plenty of sunshine. Because the lift lines were short, it was easy to get 10-15 runs in before lunchtime, and when Sam and I would meet at a lodge, he had a smile on his face and just the slightest hint of swagger.

In the afternoons, we took advantage of various luxury brands' promotional yurts, where cocktails and Champagne were served at a 1920s pace and we kicked back in Adirondack chairs with Gatsby-like insouciance. We paid a visit to Montage Deer Valley, a Five Star palace with a 35,000-square-foot spa where the swimming pool is modeled after one owned by William Randolph Hearst. (His original fortune came from the silver mines in the surrounding peaks.) One valley over, meanwhile, lies the equally cushy St. Regis, where every evening, the staff opens Champagne with a sabre as dusk turns the surrounding peaks into a melting box of Crayola crayons. We sipped appreciatively before heading out for dinner in Park City, the old silver mining town that spawned it all and hosts the Sundance Film Festival. A 10-minute drive down from Deer Valley, it retains its 19th-century façade while boasting cutting-edge galleries, boutiques and some of the finest dining on either side of the Rockies. The High West Distillery offered us a tasting flight of whiskeys, while Handle and Riverhorse on Main both served outstanding food, and despite the thin air, we managed to stay awake past 10 pm.

Mornings skiing. Afternoons relaxing. Evenings imbibing and eating delicious and overly caloric things that we could justify because of mornings skiing. It was a fantastic vacation, and when I skied with Sam, he was slow but confident. More importantly, he was smiling and relaxed.

On the morning the limo came to drive us back to Salt Lake City to fly home, both of us looked wistfully at the statue of Stein Eriksen at the resort's entrance and commented on the beauty of the lights in the trees lining the drive as we pulled away.

"So?" I asked Sam.

"So," he repeated, "I'd say mission accomplished...except that I only ever want to ski here."

TILL THE FAST LADY SINGS

Consider it fine arts for the Snapchat generation. Boston Opera Collaborative, in partnership with Longy School of Music, is reprising Opera Bites, a weekend of bite-size operas—proof that shortened attention spans don't equate to a loss of appreciation for the classics. The second annual cabaret-style festival features eight 10-minute works by composers culled from across the country, including librettos written by Longy faculty and students and six new compositions and world premieres. Cocktails and nibbles will be on hand, so head to the Edward M. Pickman Concert Hall on Nov. 11-13 for a taste. / Alexandra Cavallo

THIS IS TWENTY Michelle Smith is on a quest to live life to the fullest on her own terms. Legally blind and diagnosed with autism, the 20-year-old is the star of Best and Most Beautiful Things, an award-winning documentary directed by Emerson alum Garrett Zevgetis. It takes its title from a quote by Helen Keller, who, like Smith, attended the Perkins School for the Blind in Watertown. Graduation brings new challenges, but Smith is determined to experience the good, the bad and the ugly of life, from getting (and losing) a job to exploring her sexuality in a kink community that becomes an unexpected source of connection and confidence. Find your way to a free screening at Emerson College on Nov. 3, followed by a Q&A with Zevgetis and Smith. / Shivani Patel

The Accountant ★1/2 When you look at the cast for this misfire, which includes two Oscar winners (star Ben Affleck and J.K. Simmons) and two Oscar nominees (John Lithgow and Anna Kendrick), it sets up expectations that director Gavin O'Connor's ridiculous yet flat crime drama never once meets. Affleck plays Christian Wolff, the titular accountant. Perhaps it's his Asperger's syndrome that makes him so great with numbers. But it's his upbringing as a Army brat (played in flashbacks to his youth by Seth Lee) under the militaristic rule of his borderline abusive father (Robert C. Treveiler) that has made him just as good with a gun. After all, watching a plastic action hero like Affleck simply tapping on a calculator for more than two hours would be pretty boring, right? Screenwriter Bill Dubuque seems to think so; he may as well have titled his script The Assassin, since the ratio of number-crunching to bone-crunching here would look pretty stark on a spreadsheet. It's interesting to wonder what Affleck—who's built a nice second career as a director—might have done with this same script. Say what you will about his acting, but the former Cantabrigian knows how to pace a film and set a tone, two elements that are woefully underserved here. Instead, we're left with a mess of a movie that could have used a little levity—this lack of self-awareness is the film's real killer. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Birth of a Nation ★★1/2 Actor Nate Parker's debut film as a writer/director, an earnest, raw look at a slave uprising in the antebellum South, shares its name with D.W. Griffith's The Birth of a Nation, the unquestionably racist 1915 drama that posited the Ku Klux Klan as heroes and saviors of the Southern states. While Parker has reclaimed the title with noble intentions, his filmmaking prowess falls far short when compared with Griffith, who helped invent cinematic techniques that have been in use for the past century. From the blunt messages spelled out by the script he conceived with his college roommate, Jean McGianni Celestin, to his heavy-handed poetic flourishes and seemingly empty attempts at symbolism (while a unique visual, why does an ear of corn bleed?), Parker is in over his head—at least as a director. His acting, however, is as strong as ever. He stars as Nat Turner, a slave who was taught to read and write by his master's wife (Penelope Ann Miller), a choice that inevitably sets him toward the path of rebellion. Armed with a Bible, Turner is tasked with using scripture to keep fellow slaves in line, and it's righteous indignation that compels him to break free. Capturing the zeitgeist, Parker's film is urgent if unremarkable. (In the suburbs.)

Deepwater Horizon ★★★ This second successful collaboration between Boston-born actor Mark Wahlberg and director Peter Berg dramatizes the events surrounding the worst oil disaster in American history, and although Berg has certainly aimed to thrill an audience once the shit—plus a lot of mud and oil—hits the fan, he isn't afraid to point fingers while he entertains. The hiss-able "BP guys" are led by Donald Vidrine (a drawling John Malkovich), who's so oily, you wonder why our heroes didn't bypass the bottom of the ocean and simply drill him for fuel instead. "We are confident in the integrity of our see-ment," Vidrine insists through his Cheshire cat grin, although crew chief Jimmy Harrell (a well-cast Kurt Russell) isn't so sure. Neither is chief electronics technician Mike Williams (Wahlberg). Berg isn't in the business of exploitation here, but you'll definitely get what you paid for once things begin going BOOM. It's an apocalyptic vision that's downright biblical, a notion reinforced late in the picture when a sea of survivors recite the Lord's Prayer together. More than just a thrilling action movie, this is a moving testament to the 11 souls who lost their lives. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

The Girl on the Train ★★ The basic plot of this mystery/thriller isn't so bad; it's likely a reason the Paula Hawkins novel it's based on has spent so long on the bestseller lists. However, Erin Cressida Wilson's adapted screenplay does a poor job of laying out a cohesive framework. Needlessly convoluted with confusing time jumps, the film also suffers from less-than-Hitchcockian direction by Tate Taylor, who was more at ease behind the camera of 2011's The Help and definitely more adept at handling the passage of time in 2014's James Brown biopic, Get on Up. Here, Taylor relies far too much on unflattering closeups and unnecessary slow motion, both of which distract from the lurid tale that could have benefitted from a different touch. Strangely, the action has been transplanted from the book's U.K. setting to upstate New York, even though British actress Emily Blunt has been cast as Rachel, the recently divorced, boozy protagonist and unreliable narrator of one-third of our tale. She's easily the best thing in the film, which centers on a missing person case while weaving in infidelity, childbearing and possibly murder. If only the thrills matched the mystery. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Hacksaw Ridge ★★★ This is the first movie Mel Gibson has directed since 2006's Apocalypto, after Hollywood turned its back on him and his anti-Semitic ravings. Ah, but Hollywood loves a good redemption story, and Gibson is also the man who made 2004's The Passion of the Christ. Like that film, Hacksaw Ridge is both deeply religious and grotesquely violent. But then, it would be wrong to gloss over the horrors of World War II's Battle of Okinawa, which occupies the second half of Mad Mel's return to directing. But before he places us on the bloody battlefield, Gibson fills in the backstory of Desmond Doss, a Seventh-day Adventist hailing from the Blue Ridge Mountains in Virginia. As played by Andrew Garfield, Doss is a skinny kid who spends his days in church when he's not standing up to his shellshocked drunk of a dad (Hugo Weaving) or pursuing his future bride Dorothy (Teresa Palmer). These scenes are as corny as our hero is cornfed, and their conventionality extends to the scenes of basic training. But Gibson's picture hits its stride once we get to the meat of the story, when Desmond—a conscientious objector who refuses to even touch a gun—nevertheless saves the lives of some 75 men. The religious imagery that closes this true tale may be a bit much, but then, no one's ever accused Gibson of understatement. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Handmaiden ★★★1/2 "Inspired by" Sarah Waters' 2002 novel Fingersmith, which was set in Victorian England, this is very much the product of Park Chan-wook, the operatic director of 2003's Oldboy. Relocating the tale to his home of South Korea (after working in America for his first English-language film, 2013's disappointing Stoker), Park presents his latest genre hybrid—a romantic crime drama—in both Korean (subtitled in white) and Japanese (subtitled in yellow) as we follow the titular handmaiden, Sook-hee (Kim Tae-ri). As we soon discover, she's the daughter of a master thief who's following in her late mother's footsteps. Her latest scheme involves persuading her employer, Japanese heiress Lady Hideko (Kim Min-hee), to marry Sook-hee's co-conspirator (Ha Jung-woo), who's posing as a count. Alas, things get complicated—and a whole lot steamier—when Hideko takes a much larger interest in her new maid. The bold eroticism on display is just as fun as the eventual (and literal) gallows humor that works its way into the third act; this is a Park Chan-wook picture, after all! As such, there are also numerous plot twists that should please fans of the filmmaker, who masterfully controls every reversal and sumptuously framed shot, aided immeasurably by his longtime collaborators, cinematographer Chung Chung-hoon and composer Jo Yeong-wook. (At Boston Common and Kendall Square.)

Jack Reacher: Never Go Back ★★ I'm hard-pressed to think of a more fitting title for this sequel to 2012's under-appreciated Jack Reacher, a gritty, small-scale throwback to '80s action movies that starred a miscast Tom Cruise as Reacher, a crime-solving, ex-military drifter made popular in a series of 21 pulpy novels by British author Lee Child. The diminutive Cruise with his brown hair and matinee-idol looks is nowhere near a physical match for the Reacher on the page, a blond, 6-foot-5-inch tree trunk of a man whose looks are almost as rough as his methods. But then, Cruise is the producer of these films, so he can do what he wants. That being said, what he did the last time out was vastly superior, thanks in no small part to the first film's villain (German director Werner Herzog in an inspired bit of casting) and its writer/director, Christopher McQuarrie, who clearly enjoyed adapting the ninth novel (One Shot) in the Reacher literary canon. Alas, McQuarrie, who graduated to the big leagues with the deliriously entertaining Mission: Impossible – Rogue Nation, has become the shepherd of that long-running, Cruise-starring series, so he was unavailable to write or direct the Reacher follow-up. Instead, this adaptation of Child's 18th Reacher tale has been lackadaisically helmed by Edward Zwick, director of Cruise's other truly bad action film, 2003's The Last Samurai. Never Go Back, indeed. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Magnificent Seven ★★★ When John Sturges directed 1960's The Magnificent Seven, it was already not-so-original, a Westernized version of Seven Samurai, Akira Kurosawa's 1954 masterpiece, itself a Japanese reconfiguring of American Western tropes. Hell, even Pixar's second film, 1998's A Bug's Life, is a variation on the same story—shorn of most of the death. Fret not, though. While the movie's PG-13 rating may not portend a bloodbath, director Antoine Fuqua's latest restores the basic tale's high body count. Fuqua reunites Denzel Washington and Ethan Hawke, co-stars of his 2001 crime drama, Training Day. Although a strong presence, Washington won't win another Oscar for his work here as Sam Chisolm, a "duly sworn warrant officer" who feels just a tad out of place, given that he's a black man hunting white criminals in 1879. OK, so the multicultural cast (Chris Pratt, Byung-hun Lee and Manuel Garcia-Rulfo among them) that composes the band of outlaws, bounty hunters, gamblers and hired guns that Sam assembles to protect a small town from a robber baron (Peter Sarsgaard) may be historically ridiculous, but it's the new wrinkle that co-writers Richard Wenk (Fuqua's The Equalizer) and Nic Pizzolatto (polarizing creator of HBO's True Detective) bring to this nevertheless entertaining spin on an old yarn, frayed though it is. (In the suburbs.)

Miss Hokusai ★★★1/2 If you're a museumgoer, you may be familiar with the work of Japan's Ukiyo-e master Katsushika Hokusai. His most famous print, The Great Wave off Kanagawa, which features a gigantic ocean wave seemingly about to envelop Mount Fuji, frequently turns up on gift shop mugs and T-shirts. Keiichi Hara's sumptuously animated film beautifully evokes the artist's Edo (present-day Tokyo) in 1814, combining hand-drawn characters with a mixture of painted and computer-assisted environments by chief animator Yoshimi Itazu and background artist Hiroshi Ohno. Its focus, however, is not on Hokusai (voiced by Yutaka Matsushige), but on his 23-year-old daughter, O-Ei (Anne Watanabe), his assistant and a talented artist in her own right. Based on Hinako Sugiura's carefully researched, serialized manga that ran in Japan from 1983 to '87, the film contains subtle humor, some surrounding Hokusai disciple Zenjirô (Gaku Hamada), and melodrama involving O-Nao (Shion Shimizu), the artist's blind younger daughter. O-Ei may be the picture's beating heart, but it's the relationship with her sister that provides its soulful humanity. (At Kendall Square.)

Miss Peregrine's Home for Peculiar Children ★★ A little bit late to the literary party, Tim Burton has finally directed a movie based on a young adult property, tackling the first of Ransom Riggs' Peculiar Children books. On paper, the novel may have seemed like a good match for the filmmaker's sensibilities, but even though the production has been impeccably designed, playfully incorporating Burton's interest in the gothic and off-center, there's an unfortunate lack of character to the peculiar children onscreen, beginning with Jake Portman (Ender's Game's Asa Butterfield), a boy who can see invisible monsters. His journey introduces him to other "peculiars," from Enoch O'Conner (Finlay MacMillan)—a boy who uses the hearts of tiny animals to breathe life into inanimate objects (allowing Burton to indulge his stop-motion interests)—to Emma Bloom (Ella Purnell), a girl who's lighter than air and would float away if not for her lead shoes. But then, she'd also float away with Jake's heart, repeating history that transpired some 70 years before with Jake's grandfather (Terence Stamp). How is this possible? It all has to do with a convoluted, Groundhog Day-like time-travel gimmick known as a "loop," which is controlled by Miss Peregrine (Eva Green from Burton's Dark Shadows, his latest muse), who also has the ability to transform into a bird. If this all sounds like too much for one film, it is. (At Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

Queen of Katwe ★★★ After their modest success with 2014's Million Dollar Arm, Disney is back with another inspirational sports drama set in a foreign land. And although both are based on true stories, this tale of a young girl from rural Uganda who pursues her dream of becoming a chess champion doesn't rely on the trope of a white American who makes it possible, as John Hamm's character did in the former film when he traveled to India to tap cricket players who might excel at playing baseball. Instead, director Mira Nair (Monsoon Wedding) allows her film to be an East African story through and through, utilizing the native tongues of English and Swahili. As soccer player-turned-missionary Robert Katende (Selma's David Oyelowo) begins teaching strategic thinking and risk-taking to underprivileged youths through the game of chess, he recognizes the potential in 10-year-old Phiona Mutesi (luminous newcomer Madina Nalwanga), encouraging her to compete on a higher level. Alas, Phiona's mother (Lupita Nyong'o, an Oscar winner for 12 Years a Slave) would rather her daughter be more practical and sell corn to help keep a roof over their heads. OK, so William Wheeler's script (based on the book by Tim Crothers) isn't exactly breaking much new ground, but the winning performances greatly elevate this familiar story. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Sully ★★★ Nearly every time a film starring Tom Hanks comes along, critics make the observation that the actor is "the new Jimmy Stewart." But isn't it about time that we recognize the two-time Oscar winner for who he really is? If we're lucky enough to ever see another actor come along with this kind of charisma and career, perhaps the best compliment we might pay this hypothetical performer will be to refer to him as "the new Tom Hanks." But for now, we have the real thing, a man at the top of his profession in the fourth decade of his career, giving one of his best performances while working for another legend for the first time. That legend is Clint Eastwood, an 86-year-old actor who has carved out a significant second career as director, making another in a string of biographies of real-life figures. His latest subject? Chesley "Sully" Sullenberger, an airline pilot known for saving the lives of 155 people in the "Miracle on the Hudson." This dramatized account shows us the forced landing from different points of view in each of the film's three acts, but it's during the rescue effort, when hundreds of New Yorkers mobilize to save every last passenger, that you may shed a tear; it's here that Eastwood displays the best of humanity, moored by Hanks' dialed-back performance. (In the suburbs.)

PITCH PERFECT Usually, we're not big fans of pushing the season. Twinkle lights and Rudolph? C'mon, we just took off our Halloween costumes! But Pentatonix's cover of Leonard Cohen's "Hallelujah" off their just-dropped new Christmas album has us jonesing for jingle bells, proof of the a capella group's considerable talents. The young quintet started as three high school pals in Texas and got noticed with a YouTube video that quickly gained traction, landing them a winning spot on NBC's The Sing-Off and a fast track to fame. Fast forward and the pop group, who do stunning a capella covers of artists ranging from Survivor to Ariana Grande, have two Grammys under their belts and are touring major arenas. Get in festive spirits when Pentatonix raise their voices and the roof at the TD Garden on Nov. 9. | Alexandra Cavallo

ONCE UPON A TIME

One of autumn's most anticipated hoo-has, the Storybook Ball, took place at the Park Plaza Castle, which was brilliantly transformed into the Hundred Acre Wood for the Winnie-the-Pooh-themed evening.

Seen sipping from the honeypot was pretty much everyone who's anyone, including co-chairs Tiffany Ortiz and Paige Sutphin, breathtaking beauty Alyson Lindsey and her dashing other half, Jeff, the criminally gorgeous Daniela Corte and suave husband Stuart Roseman, Lauren Hutton lookalike Nicole Conlon and her white knight, Michael, Colombian beauty Adriana Hassan and retail king Tarek, the flawless Patty Ribakoff and the dashing Charles, force of nature Mary Jo Meisner, absurdly handsome couple Ricardo Rodriguez and Michael Kelley, latter-day Gina Lollobrigida Erica Corsano, bespectacled hipster David Sebastien Wedemeyer, stunning fashion plate Courtney Forrester and her adoring other half, Michael, Chestnut Hillion Nancy Adams, Bay Area babe Sukey Forbes, statuesque brunette Kerry Swords and one woman who said, "I've been told I could floss with an anchor chain."

The over-the-top decor was enough to wow even the most jaded partygoer, dinner was delicious, and the speeches were blessedly brief. Meanwhile, there were carnival games where guests could win prizes from Giorgio Armani, Gretta Luxe and Puma, and the DJ got even the most arthritic booties shaking.

All in all, it was a flawless evening, minus an unseemly contretemps between a pair of troglodytes and three friends who happened to cross their paths (proving that even the Hundred Acre Wood has a few trolls). But as Pooh would say, "Oh, bother."

A MATTER OF TASTE

"Delicious!" seemed to be the consensus at Taste of Perkins, the annual fundraiser for the Perkins School for the Blind.

Mixing and mingling in the majesty of the Howe building were such stalwart supporters as new board member Oz Mondejar and his favorite foodie, John Verlinden, and sizzling sister, Marti Bloom, most of the Matlack clan, including Elena and Tom, blond bombshell Corinne Grousbeck, the startlingly gorgeous Katherine Chapman Stemberg, dapper dude Michael Schnitman, mistress of deliciousness Jody Adams, gorgeous gastronome Bianca Garcia and her red-hot other half, Matt Nagy, celebrity chef Colin Lynch, hotelier extraordinaire Alex Attia, party pair Wendy and Scott Hartman, silver fox Randy Kinard, JFK Library head honcho Steven Rothstein, brunette beauty Gwenn Masterman Snider and one person who wondered if it was OK to say "Nice to see you" at a school for the blind.

Among the evening's numerous diversions: a silent auction to salivate over, interactive games and the evening's signature blind tasting event, in which guests were blindfolded and challenged to guess what they were eating.

Meanwhile, one of the artfully deployed bars was located in the school's chapel, prompting one guest to say, "Well, Jesus did turn water into wine."

Which brings us to the evening's best exchange: "Any preference for wine?"

"Yes. Often."

SO SHALL YE REAP

It was a high-powered crowd that gathered at the University of Massachusetts Club for a cocktail reception to support Seed Global Health, a charity that sends medical professionals to Africa to teach critical health care practices in places that desperately need them.

Founded by Vanessa Kerry, the organization has trained more than 10,000 people and expanded to serve five African countries in only five years. The evening attracted the likes of Kerry's husband, Brian Nahed, the luscious Aisha Al Riyami and her dashing husband, Wadhah Al Adawi, Back Bay nabobs Julie and Phil Gordon, the former's father, Ken Talmage, yummy mummy Liz Fish and her debonair other half, Mike, Channel 5 babe Erika Tarantal and her handsome husband, Luke Nathan, retired educator Diana Kerry, city councilor Ayanna Pressley, the uber chic Geraldine Acuna-Sunshine, the hale and hearty Tom Weigel and his gorgeous wife, Sarah, mover and shaker Margot Davis and equally dazzling others.

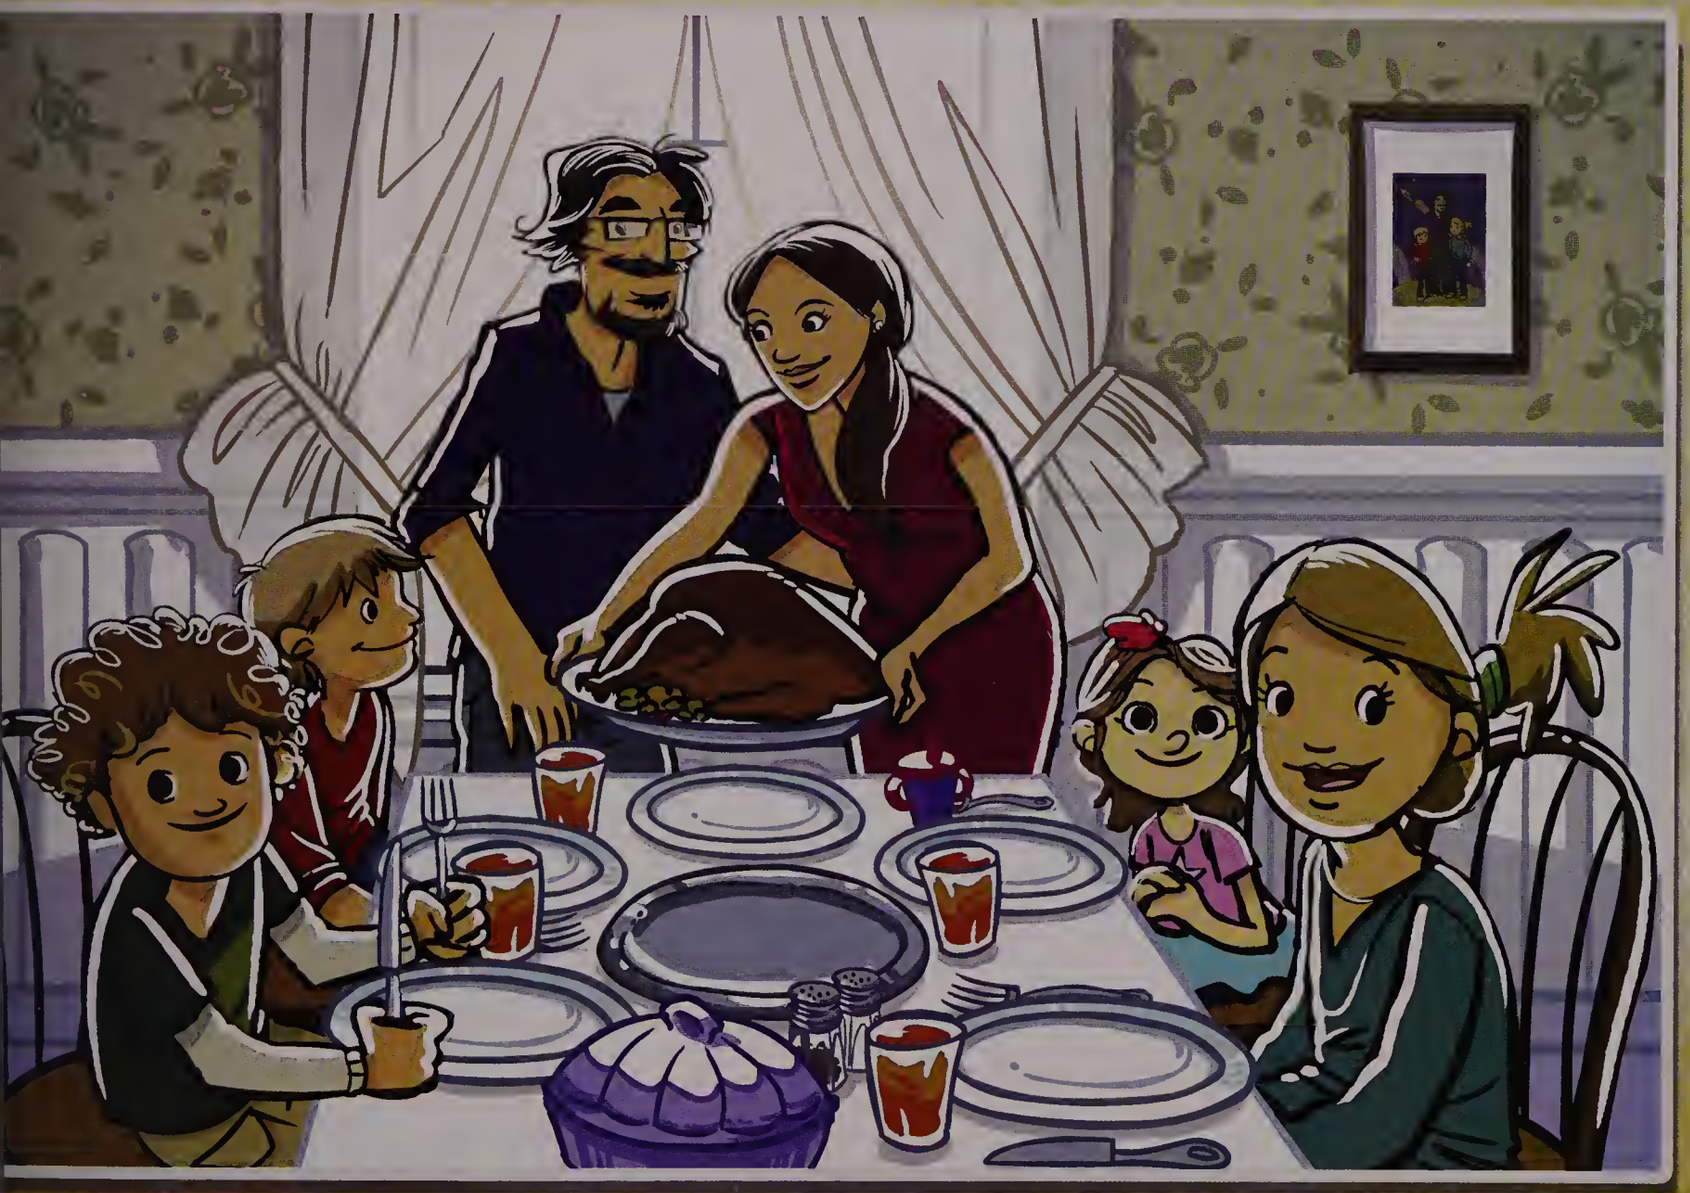
The view of Back Bay was worth the price of admission, the passed apps were delicious, and the event raised more than $100K for the cause.



The evening's best exchange: "I work at McLean Hospital."

"Or, as we call it in my family, the spa." ◆

rom Dover Rug & Home

Every rug has a story to tell. But what kind of rug would you weave to tell the story of this year? 2016. All of our interlocking moments of sadness and of joy. Threads of eternal hope. Dreams of peace. A great national conversation about the future. The power of nature. The power of love to heal and to help. All the great ups and downs of our world. A story that, perhaps, can only be told in the symbols and traditions of the weaver. Spun naturally...as it is given. As any great story...an artist's attempt to bring significance to our harried lives.

Rumi, considered the greatest of all the great Sufi poets and mystics, had this to say - "Out beyond ideas of wrong doing and right doing there is a field. Let's meet there."

From all of us at Dover Rug & Home... our sincere wishes for A Happy and Loving Holiday.

BE OUR GUEST

THE THANKSGIVING POEM "Over the River and Through the Wood" may seem treacly today, but it was penned by a pretty badass Bostonian, Lydia Maria Child, an abolitionist, women's rights activist, novelist and journalist who also wrote The American Frugal Housewife, a decidedly no-nonsense cookbook that went through more than 30 printings in the mid-1800s. It's one of the sources for Jonathan Soroff's very fun feature on holiday foods from centuries past, which has him preparing old-timey recipes and serving the results to a tough crowd (including two elementary schoolers). Stuffed squab not to your taste? Turn to Sarah Hagman's feature on how local hospitality pros are rolling out carts laden with cocktails, cheese, wine, coffee and digestifs—all ideal accompaniments for a celebratory meal. Of course, our Holiday Entertaining issue has feasts for your eyes and ears, too. Soroff chats with our talented cover gal, Berklee alum Betty Who. Paul Robicheau catches up with alt-rockers Letters to Cleo before their reunion tour hits town. And Alexandra Cavallo gets a lesson from a new Shakespearean show on how to safely stage-fight—good skills to have handy should any arguments break out at the dinner table. Happy Thanksgiving.

SHAKESPEARE & SWORDS: A Palpable Hit stages fight its from the Bard's dramas.

VIOLENT DELIGHTS

To fight or not to fight, that is the question. The answer, at least when it comes to A Palpable Hit: Shakespeare Fight Night? Put up thy dukes! The brainchild of local theater vet Daniel Berger-Jones, A Polpoble Hit, which plays at the Cambridge YMCA from Nov. 25 through Dec. 11, is an original theatrical experience that pits some of the Bard's most famous badasses—from Mercutio to Joan of Arc—against one another mano a mano.

For collaborators, Berger-Jones tapped a crew of Boston actors and choreographers, including BU College of Fine Arts' Movement and Stage Combat prof Angie Jepson, who choreographed the majority of the show's fight scenes and stars in a couple of skirmishes as well. Jepson, who first found a love for stage combat during her undergraduate studies and made it her focus throughout her MFA acting program at Brandeis, says that the fights audiences will see, while pantomimed, are extremely demanding. "I guarantee you we will all have some sore muscles during this process," she says.

Any type of choreography is a nuanced business, but combat choreography has an added challenge: making sure the battles look as real as possible without leaving the actors actually bruised and bloodied. To that end, all the brawls in A Polpoble Hit are predetermined, though there's always a margin for the unexpected. "While many safe techniques are incorporated into the choreography, there is still always the potential that something could go wrong and someone could get hurt," Jepson explains. "For this reason, we run through the fights in a fight call before every performance."

Jepson turned to past productions for inspiration, particularly ones of Romeo ond Juliet, one of her all-time favorite plays. "I've acted in Romeo ond Juliet four times, and I've choreographed the fights for it six times," she says. "Each time I approach a play again, I have new ideas on what I want to do, based on what I liked, or didn't, from the previous production. Research of the time period and research about the weapons being used goes into my work as well."

"I guarantee you we will all have some sore muscles during this process."

The fierce fights (some to the death) include matchups between "heavyweights" like Hamlet and Laertes, "welterweights" like Hermia and Helena and "rookies" like Young Siward and Macbeth, but if you ask Jepson, there's one Shakespearean bruiser who would be most likely to kick butt in a real-life brawl. "Tybalt in Romeo ond Juliet," she says. "I think he is a trained fighter who initiates fights and isn't afraid to do so. I think [he would have stayed] alive in Romeo and Juliet if it weren't for an accident that happens within a previous fight." / Alexondro Covollo

PRO TIPS FOR FAKE FIGHTS

On eyeing your target: "If I'm trying to sell that I hit someone in the face, but the path of my arm actually goes over their head, it won't look right," Jepson says. "So I teach actors how to look at their target before they execute a move. It is my belief that your hand—or sword—will go where you are looking!"

On taking a punch: "Have a safe distance from your partner so that you don't actually get hit. Then, you want to watch the path of his/her fist very closely so that you can turn your head at the moment the fist passes your face. The timing of that is crucial in order to sell the move. You then find a place on your body, hidden from the audience, where you can give yourself a small hit to make the sound effect for the move. This is called a knap. Then, you just sell it. Play the pain of what you imagine the impact to feel like!"

On throwing a punch: "Commit to the move by using your whole body. You want to bend your knees, have a wide stance and put all your energy behind the motion of your arm. Add in a sense of aggression and the audience will believe it!"

POKING THROUGH: Manoa will serve a variety of poke bowls as well as other Hawaiian cuisine.

POKE, MAN!

A HAWAIIAN EATERY SETS UP SHOP OUTSIDE PORTER SQUARE

Manoa
300 Beacon St., Somerville
manoa.fish

POKE IS HAVING A MOMENT, POPPING UP on Boston menus and at a forthcoming outpost of the California-based Poké-works chain. It's also at the heart of homegrown fast-casual eatery Manoa, which is slated to start serving the Hawaiian seafood specialty this month in Somerville.

"The meaning of the word 'poke' is to slice, or cut into cubes," says Manoa's Hawaiian-born co-owner Josiah Bonsey. "Ultimately, I think what I take away as the number-one thing about poke is it's impeccably quality fish done in a really simple way that you can eat with your fingers and just pop into your mouth while you're chilling at the beach."

Or on Beacon Street, where customers will be able to choose from five types of poke, ranging from tuna or salmon marinated in sesame and soy sauce with sweet onion to sweet chili shrimp with roasted pineapple. Each bowl will also include a base of rice or greens as well as a choice of side such as papaya salad, kelp salad and pickled edamame. Add-ons such as avocado or pickled veggies will also be offered. Non-poke menu items will include Hawaiian favorites such as a mochiko-fried chicken with papaya salad and a kalua pig with chorizo slaw. Bonsey says sourcing some of the Hawaiian products has been a challenge, but he linked up with Maine farm Ocean Approved to get kelp, and he's eager to use local fish.

"Boston really is one of the best places for us in the world for seafood. And so when we started kind of conceiving of this whole idea, that was one of the things that really drove our confidence that it could happen here," Bonsey says. "We're lucky to be in a region that actually does responsibly manage tuna. One of the few, in fact, which makes us feel like we're serving a product that we can be proud of."

Taking over the humble space from Mixtura, Manoa's interior includes a long counter where customers can order as well as a few scattered tables and benches that will seat 12-15 people near the street-facing window. The real eye-catcher in the space is a mural from Seattle artist Connie Fu that reflects the Hawaiian theme with bright colors, pineapples and a volcano.

For Bonsey, the location is just another part of the project that feels personal for him. After moving to Massachusetts from Hawaii at age 10, he lived a couple of blocks away from where he's now opening up his own restaurant.

"The thing that my brother and I joke about a lot is... 'Who in their right mind would move from Hawaii to Boston and stay here?' But in all seriousness, it really gave us that feeling that these are two places that we know really well," Bonsey says. "We have this unique opportunity to bring a little taste of Hawaii to this area, which certainly doesn't exist now."

BRUNCH CRUNCH: Brassica's banana bread French toast is topped with a griddled banana.

Good Eats: Top Banana

Bananas are the star of the show in the banana bread French toast on the Brassica Kitchen + Cafe Sunday brunch menu that launched in September. "I like to add more bananas than anything else so it really stands out," head cook Brianna Bowering says of her bread, which she soaks in in eggs, milk, powdered sugar and cinnamon before it hits the griddle. She tops the toast with a scoop of maple butter and a griddled banana for good measure, but the dish gets added edge from another fruit: Aged Japanese plums, or umeboshi, are pickled and boiled into the maple syrup. / Meghan Kavanaugh

GOING OFF SCRIPT: Anna Kendrick's new book humorously chronicles her rise to fame.

NOBODY'S BUSINESS

Oscar- and Tony- nominated actress Anna Kendrick can now add author to her list of accomplishments with this month's release of Scrappy Little Nobody, her collection of autobiographical essays about growing up in Maine, making it to Hollywood and the comedy she's found along the way. She gave us a sneak peek before her appearance at the Back Bay Events Center on Nov. 16. / Meghon Kovonough

WHY WRITE A MEMOIR AT THIS POINT IN YOUR LIFE? Well, first of all, [that's] sort of a dangerous word: memoir. [There would be] really sideways glances, especially from anyone who's older than me. I think that I just wanted to write something and got excited about creating something. ... I think it was kind of an extension of finding that the more that I put in the world and on social media and the more that I'm myself in interviews, the more fun I have interacting with people when I meet them for the first time. And since meeting people for the first time causes me a great deal of anxiety, I think the more the better.

WHAT CHAPTER DID YOU FIND MOST DIFFICULT TO WRITE? Chapters were difficult for different reasons, and one that I'm thinking about right now is the chapter about my early days and years in LA. It wasn't that it was so difficult to write it, but it was genuinely kind of uncomfortable to revisit that time. I think it's very easy after the fact to romanticize certain situations. To romanticize, certainly, any kind of starving artist narrative is tempting, but I felt so viscerally, physically uncomfortable going through pictures and being reminded of the total terror and uncertainty of that time.

BUT YOU'VE CERTAINLY GONE ON TO FIND SUCCESS. WHAT WAS MORE NERVE-WRACKING FOR YOU: YOUR TONY NOMINATION AT AGE 12 OR YOUR OSCAR NOMINATION FOR UP IN THE AIR? Oh, definitely the Oscar nomination. When I was 12, I had no idea what was going on.

IN ONE CHAPTER SET EARLY IN YOUR CAREER, YOU SWEAR OFF APPROACHING CELEBRITIES. HAS THAT STILL HELD TRUE? I definitely will not make the first move. Meeting Beyoncé, she sort of held her hand out to grab me because she had seen the Kennedy Center Honors, I guess very recently. So she was like, "You're so cute," and I was like, "I love you. Marry me and be with me forever."

YOU CHANNELED RUPAUL'S DRAG RACE BY WALKING PURSE FIRST INTO THE MET GALA THIS YEAR—WHEN CAN WE EXPECT YOU TO BRANCH OUT INTO TV AS A JUDGE? I don't want to be on my favorite show; I want to watch my favorite show. Anytime that I'm into a reality show like The Great British Bake Off or Master Chef or RuPaul, there will be some buzz around—"Would she be interested?" I always think, like, I just want to get in my PJs and watch my show. I don't want to turn it into my job.

UPGRADE
PROBLEM SALVED

Pamela Maguire, a bartender at Cambridge's Viale, knows the occupational hazards posed by stinging citrus, sharp tools and hot water firsthand. "Your hands take a beating," says Maguire, who was frustrated by skincare products that greased up glassware or failed under frequent hand washing. So she and fiance Eric Uhrynowski, a bartender at the Oysterman in Duxbury, whipped up Vincent Bartender's Hand Salve ($9), starting with experiments in their kitchen. "We wanted to use a shea butter base because we knew it was super moisturizing," she says. "Eric came up with this awesome formula that actually worked. It had avocado, sesame and vitamin E. We just wanted to help out our people and make it easier to do this really hard job we absolutely love."

The pair had gone to art school—Maguire at MassArt, Uhrynowski at RISD—so they designed the packaging, naming the product after a mischievous fox in their yard. "It became this perfect symbol because foxes are nocturnal, and he was welcoming us home from busy shifts when we were tired." They field-tested Vincent this spring at Yvonne's, where Maguire worked at the time. Now it's sold online and at the Boston Shaker, Sault New England and Commonwealth Market. "To see bartenders in Plymouth using it, and people who work at Applebee's, all the way to people at Yvonne's," Maguire says, "I feel like for the first time I'm able to give back to my community—in more ways than giving them cocktails." / Jacqueline Houton

A MOTHER'S LOVE

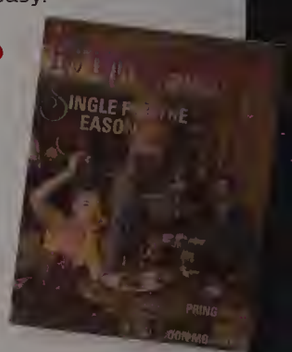
PRICE: $11

INGREDIENTS: Apple-infused tequila, cinnamon rum, grapefruit, vanilla syrup and egg white

FLAVOR PROFILE: Not your typical citrusy tequila drink, as seasonal notes are the star here. "The roasted apple mellows out some of the peppery bite of the tequila and works well with the more floral notes," says River Bar bar manager Lauren Vigdor.

ORIGINS: Bartender Brendan Hassell conceived of the drink as a play on the Conquistador, a new classic that likewise features the unlikely pairing of rum and tequila. But in a sense they're kindred spirits. "Generally, the cocktail it's based off of uses a reposado tequila, which is aged in barrels, so it's already got some of those warm vanilla flavors in the spirit itself, flavors you tend to find in rums," Vigdor says. "I like drinks that play with different base spirits."

PROCESS: Vigdor and company toss apples in cinnamon sugar and roast them until caramelized before plopping them in silver tequila for a couple of days. Infusions are also happening elsewhere on the menu, like in fall cocktail Three Snake-Leaves ($11), which pairs fig- and cedar-infused gin with lemon, honey and a balsamic reduction.



DRINK IT: As an aperitif, Vigdor suggests. "Despite the cinnamon and texture of an egg white drink, it's not super sweet," she says. As for what to drink after dinner, newcomer My Cherie Amour ($11) is another not-too-sweet option. The take on a julep features muddled mint, sherry, raspberry, lime and a dusting of powdered sugar. / Sarah Hagman

Out of 25 YEARS THE VAULT

The Improper is celebrating its 25th anniversary in 2016, and to properly mark the occasion, we've been digging through the archives for gems from issues past. Behold, some past holiday highlights, from tips on channeling your inner Scrooge to a survival guide to braving the season as a singleton.

Dec. 18, 1991
We checked in with the most famous penny pincher of them all in "Scrooge's Holiday Pointers: Tightfisted Tips for Tough Times," a piece that no doubt still resonates with many folks finessing their budgets today. "Scrooge" (aka writer Tobin Streett) gave us some tips on subjects like throwing a holiday party: "I can suggest a great way of avoiding this little holiday tragedy. Don't make friends. No friends—no party. It's that easy."

Dec. 9, 1992

People dread the holidays—and holiday get-togethers in particular—for a lot of reasons. Not the least of which is fielding questions from distant relatives and nosy friends about why you're still not married with two and a half kids and a dog. So we dished out some tips for surviving the holidays solo. Like: "Creative types may want to purchase a his and her voodoo doll set, dress them up like your [married] friends and have a blast with the pins." Ah, that yuletide joy!

Oct. 23, 1996
Think Facebook invites are passé? In a feature that tapped local party experts for secrets to hosting success, one 24-year-old PR exec suggested a hip way to send invitations: via fax machine. But she warned, "If I invite by fax... I always make follow-up calls in case of technological glitches." Probably a smart move.

GUILT AND GROWTH

THE AUTHOR OF THE DOVEKEEPERS AND PRACTICAL MAGIC RETURNS WITH A TALE OF A TRAGEDY'S AFTERMATH

Faithful* by Alice Hoffman
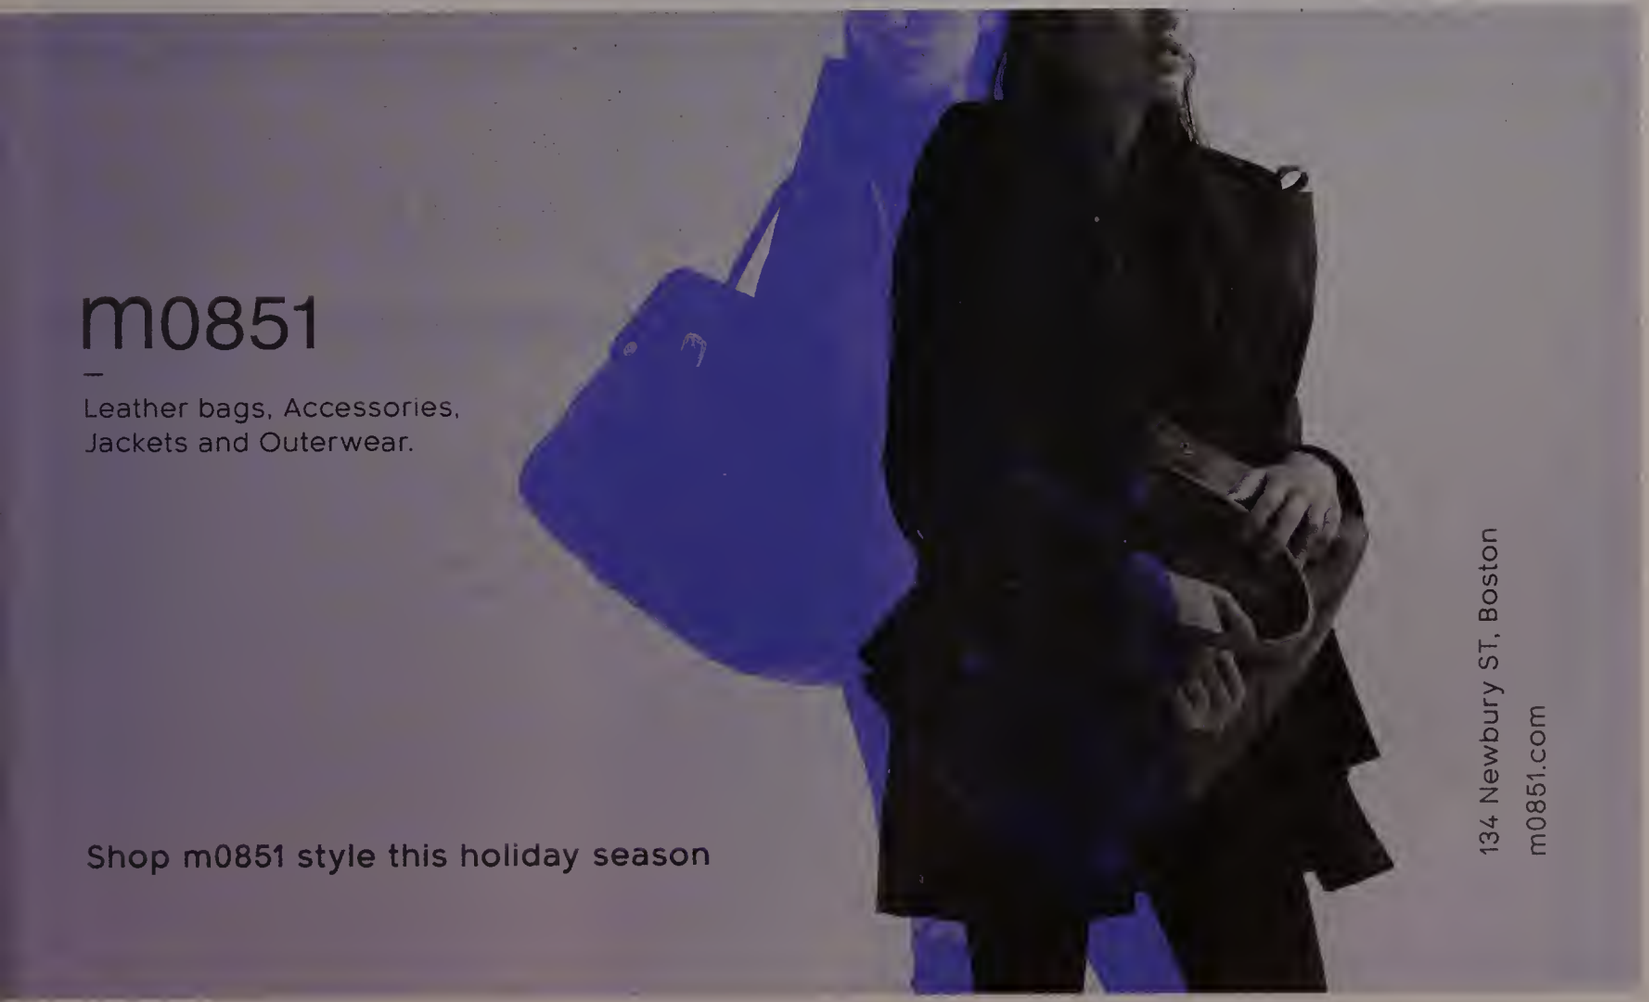
Published by Simon & Schuster, 288 pages, $26

PROLIFIC LOCAL AUTHOR ALICE Hoffman's latest novel follows Shelby, the driver in a car accident that debilitated her friend Helene. A contrarian young woman, Shelby falls into despair, rejecting college and eventually creeping back into a lower-than-she'd-planned life, working in a pet store. She connects with Ben, a guy on her own oddball level she knew in school. Guilt has made her wary and unbalanced, but she is buoyed up by mysterious messages—perhaps from some heavenly being—that somehow comfort her. "Save something," one postcard suggests delphically. Helene, meanwhile, is said to deliver mystical cures to fellow ill people from her comatose state.



Hoffman doesn't hold back on portraying our protagonist as difficult, rejecting of affection and belligerent in her teenage years and beyond. But she also shows the leery Shelby, who dislikes children, slowly becoming fond of her friend Maravelle's three kids and opening her heart to their affections with almost motherly protectiveness. Her interactions with dogs, too, reveal her softening spirit. But she rejects the kindhearted Ben, who has stubbed out his pot-smoking tendencies and risen in the veterinarian world. And there's another self-defeating affair with a married man.

Shelby's guilt, Hoffman shows, acts like a ring of barbed wire around her. But Shelby's staunchly loving mother, her generosity toward dogs, her hard work and the flickering hope delivered by those otherworldly messages help bring on her eventual salvation. And that includes a redeeming surprise.

FROM PAGE 43: There is the platform; there are the dogs. This time a girl is with them. She has tattoos on her face, blue lines and swirls. Shelby gazes at the sky and notices the clouds are white on one side, blue on the other. If you slit them open with a knife something strange would likely fall down. Snow in the summer, postcards with no postmark, advice from above. ◆

Traveler's Checks

Avianca offers a five-hour direct flight from New York's JFK Airport. A bonus? Jet lag is unlikely since you're just one time zone away.

Nestled in the mountains, Bogota's temperature hovers between 50 and 70 degrees year-round.

Bogota has no train system and buses that may be confusing for non-Spanish speakers. But cabs are affordable; $8-$10 is the rate locals are charged to get from one end of the city to the other.

CAPITAL DELIGHTS: Culture, coffee and comfort can all be found in Colombia's bustling capital.

The Escape Artist / Carley D. Thornell

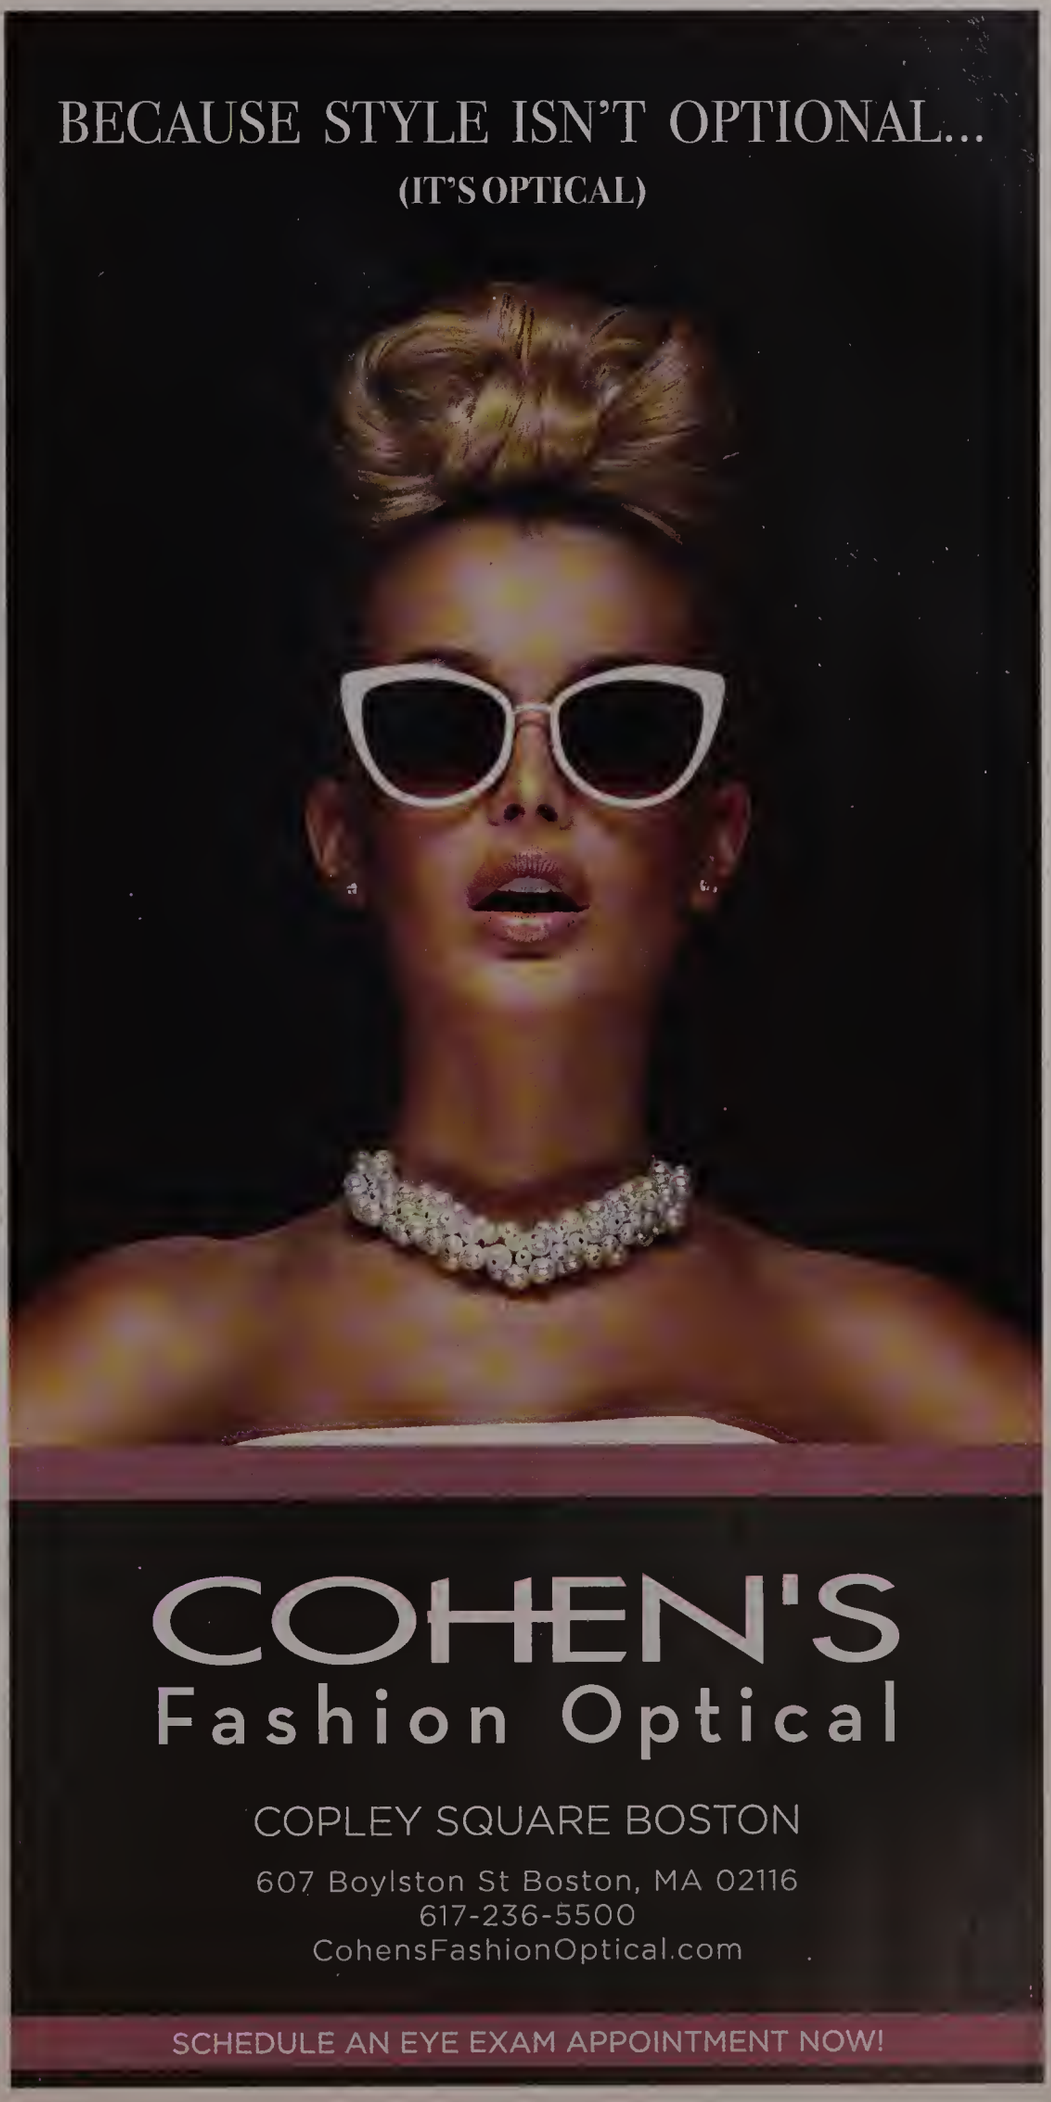
BUMPIN' & GRINDIN'

BOGOTA OFFERS PLENTY OF NIGHTLIFE AND A HOT COFFEE CULTURE.

IT MAY BE HARD TO FORGET ABOUT COLOMBIA'S sordid past when even the JFK Airport's security bins are lined with ads for the Netflix hit Narcos. But put down the remote and board a plane bound for Bogota, and you'll find a different mind-altering substance is on the rise.

Ironically, one of the world's largest producers of high-quality coffee beans used to export most of its bounty, and Colombians were left with the equivalent of canned grounds that turned into tinto (roughly translated as "inky water"). But in recent years, a sense of national pride has been brewing, and mom-and-pop shops have nestled into the capital's cobblestoned side streets. To navigate them and get an overview of this sprawling city of 8 million, book a Flavors of Bogota tour, either in a group or privately for just $50. Along the way, guides will share historical highlights and insights on contemporary happenings, such as the recently defeated peace deal that earned President Juan Manuel Santos the Nobel Prize.

To get caffeinated for a day filled with adventures—and get a lesson on brewing methods—start at Arte Y Pasión Café, where a member of the staff will bring over a glass contraption sure to bring you back to your high school beaker and burner days. Depending on your palate, you may or may not pick up on the subtle differences between this siphon method and a pour-over; either way, you'll get a fascinating tutorial on how different regions' volcanic soil and shaded, high-altitude plants make these beans one of the most prized crops in the world. Another shop worth a visit is Contraste Coffee Lab, where owner Manuel Torres shows a passion for his work that's as strong as the brews—as evidenced by his tattoos of an espresso handle and a caffeine molecule, along with his stories of taking hours-long bus rides deep onto unpaved roads to work with farmers and bring back what he considers the cream of his country's crops.



You can arrange day tours to such coffee plantations, but visitors looking to stay in the city have plenty to explore. Want to do some partying or shopping? Check into the new Four Seasons Hotel Bogota in bustling Zona T (also known as Zona Rosa), where you'll find charming shaded boulevards to stroll and upscale bakeries, antique shops and boutiques like Casa Précis, filled with works from local artisans like contemporary metal jewelry and woven leather crop tops just right for a night out. Pregame at Azahar Café, a coffee shop in a shipping container, and enjoy your single-origin brew at one of the outdoor picnic tables. You'll need the energy for Andrés Carne de Res, a thumping club whose staff has enough pep to helm a Disney kids show. Each floor holds about 1,000 people ready to enjoy everything from birthdays to bachelorette parties to a night out with Grandma (who may just shake her rump, too).

In the mood for something a little more chill? Four Seasons Casa Medina in sleepier Zona G has been open for only a year, but its stone columns and hand-carved wooden doors—pieces of repurposed Colonial convents—lend it old soul. Some rooms offer a view of the surrounding Andes peaks, and downstairs at Castanyoles coffee shop and restaurant, a glass roof and vertical garden bring the outside in. But you'll want to venture beyond the hotel for eats, as locals joke that the "G" in this zone stands for "gastronomía." For a special night out, check out Leo Cocina y Cava, where Leonor Espinosa and daughter Laura Hernandez-Espinosa lead Bogota's high-end "farm-to-table" movement—more a rainforest-to-table movement with colorful, succulent fruits and sweet vegetables plucked from the Amazon. Also not to be missed is lunch at Tábula, which offers generous portions of classic Colombian dishes like chicken, potato and corn stew, as well as whole-roasted fish from the country's Caribbean coastline.

You can also feast on some serious food for thought at any of Bogota's free and low-cost museums, like the exhibit space at the Gabriel García Márquez Cultural Center or Museo Botero. Although many signs in the city are in English, those who don't speak Spanish may benefit from a guide like Jurgen Stechauner of Hansa Tours, a former music professor who can school you on the pre-Hispanic gold artifacts at Museo del Oro, then take you over to the Candelaria neighborhood for a walking tour of vibrant sanctioned graffiti, including a stunning indigenous Wayuu woman by muralist Carlos Trilleras. This hip neighborhood helps play host to Ciclovia, a weekly happening that shuts down more than 100 kilometers of streets for cycling and strolling. It's a can't-miss event if you're lucky enough to spend a Sunday here—rent a bike and spin down to Usaquen flea market to pick up a souvenir from an unforgettable trip. ◆

COCK OF THE WALK

FAT HEN OFFERS A REFINED REMEDY FOR BOSTON'S ITALIAN-RESTAURANT BANALITIES.

IT CAN BE DEPRESSING FOR A FOOD GEEK to see customers queued up on North End sidewalks for pedestrian Italian-American fare, or packed into upmarket faux-Italian joints around town that deliver flashy ambiance but scant sophistication on the plate. Mercifully, more Bostonians are seeking out alternatives to this middlebrow flood of dull red sauce and datza-spicy-meataballa shtick. Add the new Fat Hen in East Somerville to that tiny but growing subset of our Italian restaurants that answer the call for genuine refinement in an often-debased cuisine.

Chef Michael Bergin paid earlier dues in high-end kitchens like Boston's L'Espalier and Manhattan's Del Posto, where haute French and highfalutin Italian respectively are served in labor-intensive preparations of painstakingly sourced, photogenically plated ingredients. That legacy shows in his name-checking of local farms, the sophistication of his underlying technique and the prettiness of his compositions, but a humbler neighborhood setting means Bergin can deliver them at nicer prices, like the tremendous value of the four-course "degustazione" menu (app, pasta, entree, dessert) for $45.

Certainly the room—a narrow, sparsely decorated, 30-seat bandbox lined with two parallel banquettes—gives no intimation of the finesse to follow. That starts with an uncommonly good, soft-ish semolina roll served with quality butter in good EVOO. Vitello tonnato ($15) adds novel and welcome offal gaminess to the Piemontese classic of veal dressed with tuna-spiked mayo by using thinly sliced veal tongue as its foundation. Fluke crudo ($9) is rendered like a string of jewels, pristine squares of the mild, barely marinated local flatfish topped with bits of sweet Italian frying peppers, little orange segments and the sublime umami funk of bottarga. The very dim lighting is a disservice to the chef's artful presentations—whip out your phone light to appreciate them before you tuck in.

Housemade pastas are frequently stunning, as in tortellini brodo ($17), floppy-edged pasta filled with exquisitely creamy, mildly sweet acorn squash in an extraordinarily deep-flavored, teak-toned capon consommé dotted with cubes of carrot and rutabaga. Corzetti ($16) offers similarly dramatic textural and flavor contrast between its phenomenally earthy, concentrated mushroom stock, poker-chip-sized flat discs of pasta, tangy spoonfuls of cow's-milk Cloumage and sprinkling of dark, crunchy sourdough crumbs. The superb spaghetti with Jonah crab ($18) offers abundant, buttery/briny seafood and lovely, faint accents of green tomato and bacon. Rustic flavors of cauliflower, chickpeas, garlic, dried chili and preserved lemon give tagliatelle ($15) an unexpected North African lilt and surprising richness for a vegetarian dish.

Entrees showcase Bergin's subtle flair for North Italian dishes, as in the neatly crisp-skinned, Tuscan-inspired chicken al mattone ($24) made from a very flavorful local bird, heartily flanked with al dente farro, Brussels sprouts, charred cippolinis and mild, fruity Cerignola olives. Picture-pretty lamb saddle ($28) uses fork-tender slices of almost too-mild lamb loin, saved from dullness by the umami-laden ferocity of pureed black garlic. The just-done juiciness of swordfish ($22) with bare dottings of little potatoes and clams exorcises the memory of a hundred dry, overdone versions. The savory Piemontese custard that is sformato ($20) provides the base for another intriguing, beautifully textured vegetarian dish, the custard here torn into chunks and arrayed with sunchoke, black kale, blackened pepperonata and hazelnuts. Desserts ($10) lean light and simple, as in a fine apple crostata, affogato (a bowl of espresso befogged with a scoop of salted-caramel gelato) and velvety rice pudding.

Four aperitivo cocktails make good use of Italian vermouths and amari, as in L'Avventura ($10), an icy, nicely balanced highball of bittersweet Meletti and Santa Maria al Monte punched up with lemon, mint and nutmeg. The beer list includes four mild, food-friendly styles ($6-$8) and five heftier Italian craft brews ($15). The small waitstaff negotiates the usually packed, comfortably loud room with informal grace and charm.

Fat Hen's surprise secret weapon, though, is sommelier Paige Farrell, a veteran of Asta and Menton who brings a nonpareil ebullience and élan to the service of a wittily curated list: nine options by the glass ($11-$14, bottles $44-$56) and 24 bottles ($44-$175, most under $75), including six on a "racconto" list highlighting particular varietals, producers or themes. She deftly guided us to nice-priced delights like the 2010 Pietregiovani ($11/$44), an inky charmer of a Puglian negroamaro with an elegant, barely tannic finish; the 2012 Bussola Ca' del Laito ($14/$56), a valpolicella ripasso from the Veneto, dropping the smack of a medium-big amarone at a fraction of the price; and the 2014 Eugenio Bocchino "Roccabella" ($75), a Piemontese nebbiolo that poured with intriguing, rough-edged complexity and opened up into something whispery, silky, ravishing.

Ultimately, Fat Hen represents a useful extension of several underserved aesthetics: fine-dining quality sans white-tablecloth pomp at neighborhood prices (pioneered on this block by the adjacent La Brasa), tonier treatments of revered regional Italian traditions (recently exemplified by the South End's SRV and Bar Mezzana) and the kind of fierce little wine program that can elevate a modest-seeming weeknight spot into something occasion-worthy. Over a restaurant scene that staggers under the weight of too much leaden veal parm and too many ghastly, warmed-over Sopranos cliches, the unprepossessing little Fat Hen unexpectedly, fantastically soars. ◆

Q: WHAT'S THE BEST TREATMENT FOR CROW'S FEET?

A: Crow's feet, the lines at the outside corners of our eyes are formed over time as a result of squinting or losing facial volume. There are five methods of reducing or eliminating these crow's feet.: Botox, microneedling, fractional laser, RF skin tightening and ultherapy.

RF skin tightening and ultherapy heat up the collagen so the skin contracts and the lines will be diminished. Fractional laser and microneedling stimulate the skin to repair itself and build new collagen.

Lastly, Botox or Dysport can be injected into the crow's feet to relax the facial muscles causing the lines and temporarily smooth out that area.

Come in for a free consultation and our experts will help guide you to the best option for you!

STRANGER THINGS

MARVEL'S LATEST DAZZLES WITH ITS STRONG VISUALS, DESPITE A FAMILIAR STORY.

After 14 films and counting, I've resigned myself to the fact that the Marvel Cinematic Universe is here to stay. Not only that, but it's expanding—and I'm not just referring to the fact that there are eight (!) more pictures in the MCU's "Phase Three" slated for release during the next two-and-a-half years. No, I'm speaking about the eye-popping alternate (and parallel) dimensions on magical display in director Scott Derrickson's otherwise paint-by-numbers origin story Doctor Strange.

Oscar nominee Benedict Cumberbatch's Stephen Strange could be a direct descendent of Robert Downey Jr.'s Tony Stark, insofar as he's a charismatic, arrogant, wealthy and materialistic man of hubris. However, when a horrific car accident strips this world-famous neurosurgeon of the use of his hands, he rebuilds his life not in one of the familiar playing fields of Marvel's well-established superhero universe where Iron Man might do battle, but in the mind-bending multiverse that Derrickson and his army of talented visual effects artists have conjured into dazzling existence. If you enjoyed the trippy Quantum Realm in the climax of 2015's Ant-Man, you ain't seen nothing yet. This is one picture that you should seek out in both IMAX and 3-D—and we happen to have one of the best of such theaters just outside the city, the Sunbrella IMAX 3D Theater at Jordan's Furniture in Reading, where you can experience the strange doctor's exploits in 4K laser projection.

But no matter where you choose to see the spectacular sights, you'll still find yourself sitting through a somewhat rote tale of redemption and rebirth. The screenplay courtesy of Derrickson, Jon Spaihts and C. Robert Cargill follows a familiar path on the broken man's journey toward becoming the Master of the Mystic Arts, even if it takes him to an unexpected place. After exhausting every medical option in his attempts to heal the hands that have become shakier than the British Cumberbatch's American patois, Strange travels to Kamar-Taj, an arcane enclave hidden within Kathmandu, where martial-arts practitioner Baron Mordo (12 Years a Slave's Chiwetel Ejiofor) saves the good doctor from further injury at the hands of thugs before introducing him to the Ancient One (Oscar winner Tilda Swinton), the bald-headed leader of a clan of magic-wielding monks.

Sorcerers...do battle in kaleidoscopic war zones that would make M.C. Escher's head spin.

When Tony Stark healed his broken body eight-and-a-half years ago in Iron Man, the film that kicked off the MCU, he did so with equal parts ingenuity and science. Strange is an equally brilliant materialist, but he's shocked when his new mentor, a Celtic woman who's somehow been living and teaching for hundreds of years, opens his eyes to a larger world of mysticism that's completely at odds with what his rational mind has told him is possible. But then, you'd become a believer too, if you were sent hurtling through time and space in a series of shots that beautifully evoke the pop art-infused planes of existence that original Doctor Strange illustrator Steve Ditko used in the earliest issues of the comic book he co-created with Stan Lee (who shows up in his obligatory cameo). Think of the climactic stargate sequence in 2001: A Space Odyssey that fueled so many cinematic acid trips back in 1968, but with a layer of humor laced throughout.

You may be getting the sense that this film is basically a retread of Iron Man's original adventure. Once Strange adopts a goatee to go along with his massive ego and self-deprecating jokes (not to mention his equally ornamental love interest played by Rachel McAdams in a Gwyneth Paltrow key), you'd basically be right. Marvel's latest hero to be taught a lesson in humility as he learns to wield great power is essentially Tony Stark as the world's greatest magician. But rather than wearing a suit of armor, Strange is cloaked in a sentient red cape that conveniently grants him the Iron Man-like ability to soar through the heavens, only now those heavens may be set in parallel and mirror universes, concepts that the MCU will presumably be exploring more once our newly dubbed Sorcerer Supreme teams up with, say, Thor—a prospect teased during the closing credits, so as always, remain seated.

Now, if I've made this film sound like it's some sort of Frankenstein freak built from the spare parts of what's come before, that'd be doing a disservice to the strong turns by everyone in the cast (which also includes Michael Stuhlbarg, Benedict Wong and Mads Mikkelsen), not to mention the unbridled imagination on display. Sure, the trailers may have prepared you for a recycled journey through the city-folding gags borrowed from Christopher Nolan's Inception. But these twisting metropolises are more than just a strong visual backdrop for foreground action; Derrickson pushes into them as sorcerers dive through portals and do battle in kaleidoscopic war zones that would make M.C. Escher's head spin.

Will you achieve the same spiritual enlightenment as Strange does by the end? Not even close, but if you enjoy these Marvel movies, the addition of magic to the MCU is just enough to add some new fizz to the formula. ◆

HERE AND NOW

KAY HANLEY COMES FULL CIRCLE, FROM BEHIND THE SCENES TO THE CLEO SPOTLIGHT.

MOST BANDS THAT STAGE A REUNION along with a new record are looking to re-entrench themselves in the marketplace. But not Letters to Cleo, the '90s alt-rockers who revisit their home turf at the Paradise on Nov. 19 and the Sinclair the next night, capping a five-city tour behind punchy EP Back to Nebraska.

"All of it is really just about getting our kicks," singer Kay Hanley says. "I don't see any long-term scenario for this situation. We recorded new music because we had time to do it and organically that's what happened. We had no plans to play any shows."

After all, three members of the band—now all in their 40s—live and thrive in LA. Michael Eisenstein toured as a guitarist for Melissa Etheridge and Tonic before settling into production work at his Death Star studio, where Cleo made their new record. Drummer Stacy Jones became Miley Cyrus' music director after fronting American Hi-Fi, arranging for Hanley to sing backup on Cyrus' 2008 tour. Hanley writes music for TV shows, including Disney's Doc McStuffins. Greg McKenna remained in Boston, swapping his guitar for a mechanical engineering career. (Bassist Scott Riebling stuck to producing and his Stoked pizza business and was replaced by Joe Klompus on tour.)

"I get to write songs every day and I'm in the studio every day, but I don't have to put on lip gloss if I don't want to."

Periodic reunion talks would usually fizzle. Letters to Cleo last played Boston in 2008 and hadn't released new music in 17 years. But this time was different. "The next thing I know I had some work tapes in my email from Greg," says Hanley, who convened with Eisenstein and Jones at Death Star to bang out songs from McKenna's chord progressions. "We sat on the floor with guitars and tacos from a taco truck and just wrote the arrangements and finished the lyrics in the studio that day."

LETTERS TO CLEO
play the Paradise Rock Club on Nov. 19 and the Sinclair on Nov. 20.

Honed by band members' musical maturation through their varied experiences, the resulting five-song EP yields crisp, familiar power-pop that bridges punk and bubblegum, from the bracing "4 Leaf Clover" to the yearning title track about Hanley visiting a friend in Nebraska who had cancer. "After she died, I'd call her cellphone just to hear her outgoing message so I could hear her voice," Hanley says. "That's probably the most literal song I've ever written."

In skill and perspective, Hanley's come a long way since Dorchester, where she grew up across the street from Donnie and Mark Wahlberg. She recalls a more recent chat with Donnie when New Kids on the Block were rehearsing next door to Cyrus' band. "At one point, he said to me, 'Can you believe we got out—and we're doing this!' There are some things that you can imagine doing to get out, but being in the entertainment business is wild. It seems so frivolous to someone when you come up in a family that's struggling to make ends meet."

Even when Letters to Cleo broke out of Boston, signed to a major label and spun "Here & Now" into a national hit, Hanley says, "Being like a famous pop star felt deeply uncomfortable to me, which is probably why I ended up sabotaging quite a few opportunities." That included her refusing to co-write with major songwriters and resisting attempts to have her "step out in front of the band," she says.

Now Hanley loves LA, where she gained confidence through her "transformative" first job-for-hire, singing for the lead character in the 2001 movie Josie and the Pussycats, with encouragement from producer Kenneth "Babyface" Edmonds.

"I always wanted to do the work that I do, but behind the scenes, and not have to sell myself," she says. "This is like the happiest balance that I can imagine. I get to write songs every day and I'm in the studio every day, but I don't have to put on lip gloss if I don't want to."

Today, Hanley keeps studio hours that let her get home to her two children, co-parented with Eisenstein since their 2010 separation. "Getting together to write songs was harder for me than learning how to raise kids," she says. "That was the last frontier for us. I'm really grateful that we have a new version of our family." ◆

SHIP WRECKED

IT TURNS OUT, DRINKING IN THE SUN FOR FIVE DAYS ON A PRIVATE YACHT AIN'T SO BAD.

I RARELY GIVE VACATION ADVICE, BECAUSE vacation preferences are a highly personal matter. One man's idyll is another's hellish ennui, and everyone's got a unique definition of fun. My globe-trotting colleague Jonathan Soroff classifies adventure travel as anything that involves thread counts below 600. Meanwhile, my friends Aaron and Carrie got scuba-certified just so they could dive the Great Blue Hole in Belize, which sounds like the kind of terrifying activity from which not everybody comes home. And in fact, the Great Blue Hole proved too much for one guy on their boat, making for a long ride back to the dock with a corpse for company. Call me soft, but I prefer to avoid mortal terrors of the briny deep.

So your vacation is not my vacation, but this is the time of year when thoughts turn to palm trees and beaches, and over the years I've heard one particular destination referenced in universally reverential tones and hung with the phrase "best vacation ever." That would be a sailing trip with the Moorings out of their British Virgin Islands location. The concept is pretty simple: You sail around BVI on a private yacht with a crew to make your meals and mix your drinks and ensure that you make it from island to island without sinking or causing international incidents. (You can also try this without a crew, if your idea of leisure involves sewage pump-outs and crushing responsibility.) I know that a crewed charter sounds very Jay and Bey, but it's not as expensive as you might think—in our case, about $1,600 per person for five nights, and that included food and booze. Calculate what you'd spend for Painkillers and mojitos over five nights, and the Moorings is like a Carnival cruise without the jorts and norovirus.

The tab was reasonably reasonable because we split it three ways between couples with our friends Steph and Ted and Dave and Michele. Each couple got a cabin on the 48-foot catamaran, with the fourth berth reserved for the captain and his wife, a South African couple probably in their late 50s. Our crew, who we'll call Ahab and Rachel, were on their last tour of duty for the season and obviously sick of living on a boat with demanding vacationers, some of whom bring their own tiny bells to ring when they want something. Ahab, who had a beard and hoop earrings (as required by the International Code for Salty Fellows), lamented, "People think we're stupid... Maybe we are." I assured him I could get my own beers out of the cooler, especially since that was to be my main form of onboard exercise.

Ahab and Rachel's initial wariness of us was exacerbated by a certain cultural hurdle, namely Ted. On a boat under way, there is a long list of things you must not do, and Ted delighted in informing Rachel that he'd done all of them. On the first day, as we sailed for a remote beach, I saw Ted emerge from below deck and say, "Hey Rachel, I put the toilet seat up and opened the porthole, just like you said!" This news was met with an icy stare as South African earnestness collided with the Bostonian penchant for busting balls. By the next day, she was just ignoring him, as is proper.

By the middle of the week, we were in a groove. We'd sail someplace more beautiful than the place before, then go snorkeling or hike around and explore, then go back to the boat and have cocktails. You'd spend the morning sitting up front on the bow, watching the waves roll past because there's nothing else to do. Dave's phone went dead on the first day, and he never recharged it. You're just hanging out with your friends, sailing through these CGI cerulean waters and hopping off at white beaches framed by forested mountains. One day I stuffed a $20 bill in my pocket and swam to a beachfront bar. Have I adequately depicted how excellent this all was? I'm not sure that I can.

Of course, there are perils. Sometimes the crucible of close quarters causes interpersonal issues to emerge—we heard of one guy who locked himself in his cabin for a couple of days after a blowup with his shipmates. Other people, let's say ones who don't drink or swim or go outside, are odd candidates for a sailing voyage but somehow end up booking one anyway and then wondering why everyone says this is so great. And some people might party a little too hearty. "We had a guy come into a cabin and crawl into bed with someone," Rachel said. "He was coming back from a bar and got onto the wrong boat. It happens all the time."

On the last night, Ahab and Rachel seemed a little bit giddy—you could tell they were excited to get off the boat and go home for the first time in eight months. "Let's tell her we decided to stay three more nights," said Ted, before doing just that. For the first time all week, I wished he were serious. ◆

Call me soft, but I prefer to avoid mortal terrors of the briny deep.

Soroff On / Betty Who

THE BERKLEE-TRAINED POP STAR SOUNDS OFF ON HER CLASSICAL ROOTS AND HER NEED FOR KLEENEX.

POP SENSATION BETTY WHO, 25, WAS BORN JESSICA Anne Newham in Sydney, Australia. Trained as a cellist from the age of 4, she came to the United States as a teenager to study at the prestigious Interlochen Center for the Arts in Michigan. She then attended Berklee College of Music, where she launched her professional career, releasing her debut single, "Somebody Loves You," as a free download in 2012. Her debut EP, The Movement, came out a year later, and she was signed by RCA/Sony. She has toured with Katy Perry and Kylie Minogue, and she was crowned Best Female Pop Artist at the MTV Logo NewNowNext Awards. Her new single "Human Touch" dropped on Nov. 11, and she will perform at the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum as part of the RISE series on Dec. 8. She lives in Los Angeles.

JONATHAN SOROFF: So how did you come up with the name Betty Who?
BETTY WHO: I wrote a random song about a boy I loved who wouldn't love me back, which is basically what all my music is about. I was 17, and I named it "Betty Who," because I thought it was cute. Then a year later, in college, I said to my producer, "What if I went by a stage name, like Betty Who?" And he said, "That's so great. Don't ever think about it again. You're done."

Did you always dream of being a pop star? Absolutely. I was always really interested in pursuing it, even though I didn't really know how to pursue it. I think there's a lot of misconceptions about pop music, especially in the classical music world, that it's not serious, or hard, or good. I think all of those things are untrue, but it took me a while to get around my classical background.

What instruments do you play besides the cello? I taught myself guitar and piano to write, because I didn't want to have to be with somebody who could play to write songs. I wanted to do it on my own. So when I was 14 or 15, I decided to make that happen.

Single favorite piece of cello music? The Dvorak Cello Concerto. I saw the New York Phil play it for free in Prospect Park a few summers ago. I had no idea what they were going to play, and they played it with Tchaikovsky's Fifth, probably my next favorite orchestral piece in the world. It was the most beautiful moment in my life.

Strangest thing about moving to the U.S. as a teen? This is going to sound stupid, but yellow school buses. I don't know why, but I thought it was only something from the movies. I have no idea why, but I didn't think they were real.

Single most important thing you learned at Berklee? That everybody knows everybody in the music industry, and that if you are an asshole to the girl across the hall in the dorm, she's probably going to be the next head of Sony. Everywhere I go, there is always a Berklee kid in the room. It's unbelievable the amount of people I run into at studios in LA. It blows my mind.

Favorite thing about Boston? So many things. I love the Pops. I love the Christmas season in Boston. I think New England in fall is the most beautiful place. And I know it sounds crazy, but I miss the weather. I also miss Life Alive. It's one of my favorite restaurants.

"There's a lot of misconceptions about pop music, especially in the classical music world, that it's not serious, or hard, or good."

Biggest source of inspiration? It's in my personal life, my relationships with friends, romantic relationships. One of my favorite songs on my new album is a song about one of my best friends who has horrible taste in men—and I tell her that all the time. There's so much influence from the people around me. Also, my mother had so many fabulous women in her life when she had me that she couldn't pick just one godmother. I have five. So the stories and conversations from them inform my music.

What's the story behind your single "Human Touch"? It's about how you still have a connection to someone even after you're not together, and there's always a bond. The song is about that moment of looking at someone whom maybe you haven't seen in a long time and you used to love, and you say "OK, we're both single. Why don't we have one more go-round for old times' sake?"

Fantasy duet partner? Right now, Leslie Odom Jr. His voice is one of the most beautiful things I've ever heard in my entire life. I saw him in Hamilton twice, and he made me cry both times. He's a godsend.

How do you think technology has affected your career? I'm basically an artist of the internet. I wouldn't have a career if it weren't for technology and social media happening at the time that it did. When I put out my first song, it was a free download on SoundCloud. I think there are a lot of artists who have a career in the old-fashioned way of getting discovered: A label signs you and makes you. Now, there are so many more artists doing it my way, saying, "This is who I want to be." I think it's so much more of an honest and deeper way to connect, because you know it's coming from them and not a marketing department.

So there were two guys whose YouTube video of their proposal used your song "Somebody Loves You" with a flash dance mob. Did you go to their wedding? I did, and I sang an acoustic version. I couldn't look at them. I was crying. Everyone was crying. Two weeks ago, I was in Sydney, and I was doing a TV interview. Beforehand, we were in the green room, and the interviewer hadn't seen it. And my assistant pulled it up, and I said, "Don't play it. I just had my makeup done!" She did, and I was bawling. I can't watch it without weeping.

Three adjectives to describe your voice? Evolving, and sometimes good.

Your reaction when you heard your song was being used in Pitch Perfect 2? I can never believe things like that are happening, and then I forget. I was on a plane, in the window seat in economy when I decided to watch it. I completely forgot, and when it started, I was like, "Wait. I know this song. What is this?" Then I burst into tears, and the woman next to me was like, "Are you OK?"

Weirdest place you've been when one of your songs came on? It just happened in Sydney. I hadn't heard my song on the radio before, but the cover of "I Love You Always Forever" just went platinum in Sydney, and I'd just gotten off the plane. I get into a cab, and the radio is on, and that song started. I started crying. I cry a lot. ◆

CAPO'S AMARI CART

Earlier this year, Capo beverage director Kevin Mabry was sitting with fellow bartenders around a big restaurant table in Venice. "At the end of the meal, they rolled over this cart, and I was like, 'What is going on right now?' " recalls Mabry, who says it was stocked with amari, grappa, amaretto and sambuca. "Everything you'd expect after a big Italian meal in an Italian household, it was on that cart." At that moment, he decided to recreate the experience back in Boston, where diners can now order a tableside service that highlights the bitter Italian liqueurs, digestive aids that follow indulgent meals. Servers can initiate the unfamiliar or wax on for those more well-versed, offering tastes until drinkers land on a two-ounce pour worthy of savoring.

- For newcomers, Mabry explains, "We try to choose the ones that are more floral, that have botanicals that are a little bit less assertive and less drying on the palate." Served in a snifter and lighter in body, Amaro Montenegro (1) fits the bill.

- Feeling adventurous? "We also have ones that are super esoteric and aren't for your novice Southie drinker—it's no Fireball," Mabry jokes. Go for Luxardo Amaro Abano (2), one he got to taste right out of the barrel during his trip to Italy. "It's very drying on the palate and has very bitter qualities to it because of the quinine, cassis and all the other barks infused into it."

- As for Mabry's personal favorite: "I'm a big fan of Averna," he says. "It has this beautiful bitter orange quality to it; it's great in drinks and it's great by itself neat." He also points to Ramazzotti (3) as another option with kola-nut notes, adding, "If you like Coca-Cola, that's a realm you can feel pretty confident in."

- When it comes to the holiday season, "Everyone's overeating—let's be honest," Mabry muses. "And amari have a very warming quality to them—it's like a big warm hug at the end of the meal." After an at-home dinner, Mabry suggests Wondermint or Dr. McGillicuddy's drinkers try Branca Menta (4), a minty, eucalyptus-tinged amaro made by the same distiller as industry go-to Fernet-Branca. "It's a nice little branch away from peppermint schnapps," says Mabry, who adds that Capo features it in a daiquiri as well as a brunch cocktail spiked with cold-brew coffee for a refreshing pick-me-up.

LOYAL NINE'S COFFEE CART

As Colonial-inspired restaurant Loyal Nine and its adjoining cafe were preparing to open in the spring of 2015, ideas for ways to round out guests' experience started percolating. "Typically, you need electricity to do any form of coffee," says cafe manager Lena Johnson. "But with siphon, because it uses the Bunsen burner, it's electricity free." Then came the light bulb moment: "Why not do it tableside?" Before wheeling over the after-dinner treat, servers grind beans and gather a thermometer, a timer and other tools for the five-minute process that has them fielding questions from excited onlookers. Says Johnson, "It's like a science experiment at your table."

- Dating back to the 19th century, the siphon combines two methods—immersion, as in a French press, and filter brewing, as with a V60—which lends a unique flavor profile. "You get those deep, rich flavors from that long-term contact with the coffee, as well as that clean, crisp feeling."

- When a server appears, diners get a lesson in vacuum pressure. "As you boil the water, it rises to the top of the chamber," Johnson explains. When the water reaches about 93 degrees Celsius, an exact amount of ground beans—here, 34 grams—is mixed in with the liquid and stirred twice. "When you cut the heat after a minute or so, the coffee then filters through." Because there's little transfer of heat, it's piping hot, Johnson says.

- Loyal Nine's guest roast program highlights a new purveyor, like Denver's Huckleberry Roasters or Montreal's Dispatch Coffee, every two months. "The philosophy is offering one coffee multiple ways, so you can decipher how the different methods bring out different flavors within the coffee," Johnson says. Colorado's Sweet Bloom Coffee Roasters is on tap through November.

- Alongside their siphoned cup of joe, Johnson suggests diners order the four-days-in-the-making sourdough chocolate brewis. "It's this super rich, chocolate-y bread pudding dish with all these textures and flavors. It's kind of a show in and of itself because the server will come over and explain each topping as they pour it on." Its many garnishes, sauces and housemade candies might include pumpkin seed brittle with smoked cayenne and toasted yeast streusel.

- "This is a huge crowd-pleaser," Johnson says of the theatrical brewing method. "It does require some attention to detail, but if you have a little bit of the knowledge and the interest, it's totally possible to do on your own." The cafe's Japanese Hario brewer isn't hard to track down, but her top tip for serving great coffee at home is to invest in a good grinder.

NO. 9 PARK'S CHEESE CART

No. 9 Park has been rolling out its cheese cart since opening its doors in 1998, but the lineup is always changing, as server and cheese buyer Kevyn Ashton brings in a rotation of nearly 20 daily options, most sourced from Formaggio Kitchen. "There's a lot of cheeses that we've seen time and time again," says Ashton, like staff favorite Brebirousse d'Argental. "But it's fun to introduce ones that I've not seen, because that means our guests probably haven't." Some diners are visiting weekly to check out what's new, whether that's at the bar, as an appetizer or as a dessert course (assistant general manager Ashley Waugh's top recommendation). However guests dig in, wheeling the cart over gives servers the opportunity to answer questions. "The contrast in texture is really what grabs people," Ashton says, adding, "If you're like me—I'm a visual cheese chooser."

- "I like cheeses that have that semi-firm sort of paste to them, so they're not too oozy and they're not too hard," Ashton says, pointing to the Grayson (1), made of cow's milk, and the Casatica (2), a bloomy-rind cheese made of buffalo's milk. "As it tempers, it definitely has a saltiness to it—it's an explosion of flavors."

- Valserena, a Parmigiano-Reggiano handpicked by chef Barbara Lynch, is available in two forms, which Waugh suggests tasting together. "One's aged for 12 months (3) and it's a little bit softer, not quite as robust in its nuttiness, and the 48-month (4) starts to develop those protein crystals—a really savory, nutty experience."

- As for "funkier" options, look to washed-rind cheeses, doused in everything from beer to spirits and salt brines. No. 9 Park often serves Époisses de Bourgogne, a brandy-washed cheese from Burgundy that brings earthy, meaty notes. Ashton also suggests Ouleout (5), named for a creek that runs through Walton, New York. "It's made by a gentleman who started in cheese illegally in Brooklyn—in his basement apartment," Ashton says. "He decided to go legit, and he's now with his wife on a dairy farm."

- For beverage pairings, Waugh prefers bubbles. "Champagne goes really well with creamier washed-rind cheeses; the brioche-y, bread-y autolytic flavors meld really nicely with the meatier, more savory flavors of those types." Ashton, meanwhile, offers a suggestion that steers away from the typical pairing of blue cheese and port, pointing instead to a botrytized wine from Austrian producer Kracher that's made from grapes infested with the friendly fungus Botrytis cinerea. "I really love that wine because it does have that sweetness and it does have some acidity, which can help clean up the palate a little."

PORTO'S COCKTAIL CART

Before Porto's cocktail cart was zipping through the Mediterranean restaurant, beverage director Neil Quigley wheeled it up the block from the nearby Crate and Barrel. Originally, the team just wanted to offer a Champagne service at brunch, but they soon started highlighting a specialty off-menu cocktail, having bartenders drop by to explain the concept, preparation and ingredients. "It's basically like having a bar right at your table," Quigley says. And the monthly rotating specialties have gotten more elaborate in the short time the restaurant has been open. "It usually starts a chain reaction. Once one person orders it, everybody's snapping their necks, trying to see what's going on."

- Through November, Quigley is mixing up Midwinter's Breakfast, a cocktail with Drambuie, Great King Street blended scotch, Laphroaig, lemon and lapsang souchong tea. "It's sort of a mix between a hot toddy and a Rusty Nail, but it's got this cool smoky element." Next, as we head deeper into winter, he'll play with notes of spruce, fir and pine.

- To make the carts eye-catching, Quigley has displayed piled limes, large chunks of sugar and even mounted an axe in a halved wooden log. Here, the tea lover and vintage collector brought in pieces from home to style a whimsical centerpiece.

- Past theatrics include smoking the glass with white sage or cherry wood and throwing the cocktail, "a hybrid between stirring and shaking." Quigley explains, "You pour the liquid from a very long height between two shaker tins back and forth a few times." The current cocktail lends itself to some drama too. "We pour boiling hot water out of the kettle through a strainer full of tea into the cup. Very slowly, you get this nice aroma and steam."

- "One of the things I like to do with the cart is not serve the spirit out of its standard bottle," Quigley says. "There's a different feel if you've got it decanted into a separate container."

- Quigley has some other ideas for impressing guests at home. "I love magnums of wine, especially when you get into the 3 liter and above sizes," he says. He also suggests prepping a punch before guests arrive to cut down on hosting duties. "My trick of the trade is to get one massive cube of ice so it doesn't get over diluted," he says, also noting that you can balance garnishes on top of it.

BONDIR'S WINE CART

Recalling a night out in Paris, Bondir chef/owner Jason Bond especially remembers one restaurant's Champagne cart that lent an extra special touch. Back in Cambridge, Bond reached out to North Bennet Street School grad and furniture maker Richard Oedel, who measured the height and space between tables so the cart could fit seamlessly in Bondir's intimate space. The cart has served various duties, displaying everything from bread to haggis, but it also sports a copper bucket that drains melting ice, so it most often showcases Bond's carefully curated wine list. "There's nothing too aggressive, no hammers here," he says of the bottles chosen to pair with his ever-changing menu. Bond says he's also on the lookout for stories, adding, "Just like the old reserve beers that we have, I like to find things made by individuals that have their own sort of ideas they want to convey."

- When entertaining at home, Bond says, "I always like a good mix—a couple Champagnes, a rosé, a rich white, a beautiful red. You might offer different wine for the different courses; you might just have one big serving."

- "I'm a Champagne guy," Bond admits. And with a list that fluctuates between 20 and 30 bottles, "There's not that many wines where we'll have multiples from the same producer." But Bond made an exception in the case of Eric Rodez, an eighth-generation organic producer who was once a cellar master at Krug. In addition to Rodez's cuvee style, Bond stocks a rosé—which happens to be Bondir's top-selling bubbly—that's partially aged in oak and lends notes of cranberry and raspberry.

- "I love finding good reds that have good age on them," Bond says. "It's something hard to find." One standout discovery: a Barolo from Alessandro Ceretto boasting notes of tar, tobacco, rose and dark fruits, meant to age for up to 20 years. "I'd be happy to drink that Barolo for most of the night."

- While not a fan of America's grassy viogniers, Bond picked up the French viognier Les Contours de Deponcins, made by former chef turned self-taught producer Francois Villard. "He's on really steep vineyards; they're old terraces that were built by the Romans." With hand-picked, barrel-aged grapes, the concentrated white wine features notes of honeysuckle and dried fruits.

History on a Platter

BY JONATHAN SOROFF | PHOTOGRAPHED BY HOLLY RIKE

Ah, the good old days! But were they, really?

The holidays induce nostalgia like no other season, but as we try to out-Currier-and-Ives each other with celebrations out of Norman Rockwell's wet dreams, are we just kidding ourselves? Are we romanticizing the past, especially when it comes to food?

We decided to find out, by recreating three historically accurate recipes for dishes that would traditionally be served during the holidays in centuries past. I enlisted the aid of two friends who are excellent cooks and commandeered the astonishingly well-appointed kitchen of one of them to conduct our experiment. My friend Janet has worked as a professional chef and can resuscitate a deflated soufflé, while my friend Liz is a walking Pinterest board who makes Martha Stewart look like an amateur blogger.

For expert guidance, I turned to three food historians. From chef Sherry Pocknett of the Pequot Museum in Mashantucket, Connecticut, I received a recipe for stuffed pumpkin. A descendant of the Wampanoags who saved the Pilgrims' bacon that first winter 400 years ago, Pocknett points out, "Indigenous people never celebrated what we now call 'Thanksgiving' that happens in November. We did, however, celebrate many thanksgivings throughout the year, such as green corn thanksgiving in August, strawberry thanksgiving in May, herring thanksgiving at the end of March, et cetera."

From Kathleen Wall, the Colonial Foodways Culinarian at Plimoth Plantation, I received a recipe for minced pie, although she pointed out that in Plimoth in 1621, Gov. William Bradford told everyone to get back to work instead of observing the holiday, and that back then, Christmas was a season, not just a day. "Twelfth Night was the big one. But in any case, this recipe is really more of a 'Meanwhile, back in England...' "

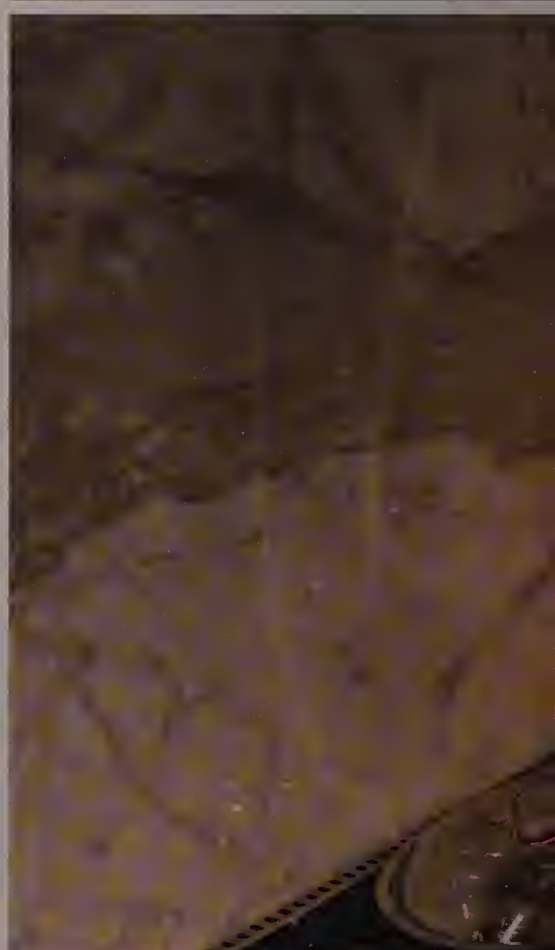
Ryan Beckman, food historian at Old Sturbridge Village, forwarded a recipe for potted pigeon, pointing out, "The pigeon receipt [sic] is something that would be common in early 19th-century Boston. It could be interesting, due to the difficulty of finding passenger pigeons (they're extinct). But even cooking and eating whole squab is a strange thing nowadays, and there's a gross-out factor, as well as it being just outright inconvenient."

Armed with ambiguous directions, written in vague and arcane language, I went about sourcing the ingredients, some of which necessitated 21st-century substitutes—squab for pigeon, lamb for mutton. Thankfully, though, I didn't have to hunt, forage, grow, trap, skin, pluck or gut anything. As ugly as the Whole Foods parking lot gets, it had most of what I needed, and gourmet food purveyor Savenor's provided game that matched my requirements as closely as anything in this day and age could.

"Ungapatchka" is the Yiddish term for something overly ornate, laborious and fussy, and I'm not sure if the Wampanoags had an equivalent term, but their recipe for stuffed pumpkin certainly qualifies. The 14 major ingredients—onion, garlic, cubed venison, wild rice, brown rice, white rice, whole kernel corn, kidney beans, butternut squash, sunchokes, dried cranberries, whole cranberries, scallions and maple syrup—have to be prepped separately and then assembled into a stew, then stuffed into a roasted pumpkin. It sounded like a lot of work. But it also sounded delicious.

With 51 Halloweens under my belt, it takes me no time to gut a pumpkin, but when I arrayed the remaining ingredients before me and reviewed the steps it would take to combine them, I was gob-smacked by the idea that any 17th-century indigenous person had that much counter space. The venison, cubed for a stew, leaked blood in Liz's refrigerator, causing a 10-minute delay, during which her 9-year-old daughter, Isabelle, asked, "What time will you be done?" It was 3 pm. Optimistically, I said, "Seven."

Then I tried to figure out which of the other ingredients should be cooked first. I roasted the sunchokes and squash while boiling the three different types of rice, as well as the kidney beans. Then the pumpkins went into the oven. Because fresh cranberries and corn weren't available, I used frozen and set those out to thaw while Janet chopped garlic and onion, browned them and began sauteing the venison, then letting it simmer in beef broth. The process was both time-consuming and labor-intensive, claiming no fewer than five pots on three burners, plus two ovens.



> "What time will you be done?" It was 3 pm. Optimistically, I said, "Seven."

With those ingredients under way, we turned our attention to the minced pie and potted pigeons, but it was the stuffed pumpkin that took the longest. When it was finished, it looked absolutely gorgeous and smelled superb. There was little direction in the recipe as to seasoning, and I'm guessing the Wampanoags didn't have Liz's encyclopedic and alphabetized spice rack, so I didn't want to make any assumptions. Nevertheless, in retrospect, I wish I'd heeded the advice of all my chef friends who constantly instruct me to taste as I go along, and seasoned it more.

The verdict, from my husband, Sam: "It's bland, but it would be a great dinner party dish. The presentation is gorgeous. We just need to tweak the ratio of ingredients and rethink the seasoning."

And for the record: When I looked at my watch, it was 7 pm on the dot.

Stuffed Pumpkin

INGREDIENTS:

1 8- to 10-pound pumpkin
2 tablespoons sunflower oil or olive oil
2 pounds of cubed venison stew meat
1 large onion roughly chopped
4 chopped garlic cloves
1 ½ cup wild rice, cooked
1 ½ cup brown rice, cooked
1 ½ cup white rice, cooked
1 cup whole kernel corn
1 cup kidney beans
1 cup cubed butternut squash, cooked
1 cup diced sunchokes, cooked
1 cup dried cranberries
½ cup whole cranberries
1 cup minced scallion
½ cup maple syrup
½ teaspoon cracked black pepper
1 teaspoon salt
Optional: ½ cup toasted and salted pumpkin seeds

DIRECTIONS:

Preheat oven to 400 degrees. Cut top from the pumpkin, remove the strings and set aside the seeds.

Place the pumpkin on a parchment-lined sheet pan and bake for 25 minutes. Do not overcook. Remove the pumpkin from the oven and let stand.

Heat 1 tablespoon of oil in a large skillet over medium-high heat. Add the venison cubes, onion and garlic to the skillet, stirring occasionally for 1-2 minutes until browned. Add enough water to cover the meat, onions and garlic and turn the heat to low. Place a cover on the skillet and let simmer for approximately 45-60 minutes, or until the meat is tender.

In a large bowl combine the following: all the rices, corn, beans, squash, sunchokes, both cranberries and maple syrup.

In a separate small skillet add 1 tablespoon of sunflower oil and saute scallions for 1-2 minutes.

Mix all the ingredients together and stuff them back into the pumpkin and serve. Use the toasted and salted pumpkin seeds as an optional garnish. Serves 10 to 12 people.

Minced meat pie was my grandfather's favorite dessert, but by the 20th century, the filling—generally canned—didn't contain any actual meat.

We had two recipes courtesy of Plimoth Plantation, one from A Propre new booke of Cokery, published in 1545, and one from the 1623 edition of Gervase Markham's English Huswife. Both called for mutton (which we replaced with lamb loin) and suet (rendered fat, which is now used most often in bird feeders during winter). Markham suggested that the meat be parboiled well, which seemed like an unforgivable thing to do to a perfectly good cut of lamb, so instead, we decided to pan sear and then roast it.

Next, it needed to be minced, as did the suet, an unappetizing brick of congealed white tallow that none of us wanted to touch, let alone cook with. The lamb loin came out of the oven smelling heavenly, and it was heartbreaking to think we had to shred it somehow.

"I need a knife and cutting board to mince this," I bravely told Liz, who countered, "Please. That's what the Cuisinart is for."

While Liz shredded the meat and suet and made dough from scratch (for pies, she's partial to Martha Stewart's recipe for classic French pâte brisée), Janet chopped up the raisins, dates and prunes. The recipe called for "orange pills," prompting Janet to say "Klonopin is kind of orange," and she was disappointed to learn that "pills" meant "peel," or zest. Fearing that the filling would be too dry, she decided to macerate the fruit in a very healthy dose of rum, mumbling, "Puritans, be damned!"

After assembling the pie, Sam gave the top an egg wash, and we put it in the oven at 350 degrees for an hour. It emerged looking delicious, but opinions were divided. Sam liked it; Janet loved it. Liz abstained, while Peter, her husband, and I both found it too bitter and too sweet. One thing we could all agree on, though, was that a single slice would be enough to get anyone wasted, because the rum didn't really cook off, and it was difficult to limit Isabelle and her sister Zoe to a single bite.

> "They'd better be good," I said. "Each one of those damned birds costs $23."

Janet took what was left of it home.

The least appealing-sounding recipe was the potted pigeons, which came courtesy of The American Frugal Housewife, an 1833 cookbook by Bostonian Lydia Maria Child. It was also the simplest. I stuffed each squab with a slice of salt pork and stuffing made from oyster crackers, butter, eggs and sweet marjoram. Then I doused them with flour, placed them in a pot, covered them in water, threw in some more butter and set them to simmer on the stove for 1 hour and 15 minutes.

Not long after the squabs started cooking, they started to give off a heavenly aroma.

"They'd better be good," I said. "Each one of those damned birds cost $23."

When they were done, Janet looked at them with a shudder and said, "They look so disgustingly fetal. They're like little homunculi."

Despite the less-than-appealing visuals and the shockingly bland recipe, they were quite delicious. "The stuffing tastes like matzo balls," Isabelle declared, which prompted Sam to opine, "They're perfect for Hanukkah!"

Meanwhile, it was Taco Tuesday, and the girls' au pair was trying to get them to sit down and eat.

"You need to eat your dinner," Liz said sternly.

"But, Momma," Zoe protested, "I didn't know there was gonna be squab!"

Zoe ate three wings, and the rest of us picked the birds clean, but perhaps most telling of all: The potted pigeon was the only dish that Monty, the black lab, tried to get at.

So what did we learn from all this? That the good old days weren't too bad, at least when it came to cooking, and never to judge a "receipt" by its cover. But I'll bet if you dropped a Cuisinart into the hands of a pilgrim, they'd first curse it as a tool of Satan and then wonder how they'd ever lived without it. ◆

A Minc't Pie

Take a Leg of Mutton, and cut the best of the best flesh from the bone, and parboyle it well: then put to it three pound of the best Mutton suet, and shred it very small: then spred it abroad, and season it with pepper and salt, cloues and mace: then put in good store of currants, great raysons and prunes cleane washt and pickt, a few dates slic't, and some orange pills slic't: then being all well mixt together, put into a coffin, or into diuers coffins, and so bake them: and when they are serued vp open the liddes, and strow store of suger on the top of the meat, and upon the lid. And in this sort you may also bake Beefe or Veale; onely the Beefe would not be parboyled, and the Veale will aske a double quantitie of suet.

Potted Pigeons

Pigeons may be either roasted, potted, or stewed. Potting is the best, and the least trouble. After they are thoroughly picked and cleaned, put a small slice of salt pork and a little ball of stuffing into the body of every pigeon. The stuffing should be made of one egg to one cracker, an equal quantity of suet, or butter, seasoned with sweet marjoram, or sage, if marjoram cannot be procured. Flour the pigeons well, lay them close together in the bottom of the pot, just cover them with water, throw in a bit of butter, and let them stew an hour and a quarter, if young; an hour and three quarters, if old. Some people turn off the liquor just before they are done, and brown the pigeons on the bottom of the pot; but this is very troublesome, as they are apt to break to pieces.

From Lydia Maria Child's The American Frugal Housewife, 1833

BEDROOM GUISE

What happens in the bedroom stays in the bedroom—except in the case of the put-upon characters in Huntington Theatre Company's Bedroom Farce. British playwright Alan Ayckbourn's 1975 comedy centers on Trevor and Susannah, a dysfunctional married couple who enter the bedrooms of their houseguests—friends and family alike—during the course of one evening, personal boundaries be damned. Not all is well with their guests either: While one couple struggles with the feeling of having settled, another ostensibly solid pair deals with secret porn stashes and a flagging sex life. MYSTERY MEAT Talk about tasting funny. A clown-turned-handyman could be on the menu for a building's tenants in 1991's Delicatessen. Each making their full-length directorial debuts, co-directors Marc Caro and Jean-Pierre Jeunet (the man behind 2001's Amélie) set their award-winning black comedy in a colorful post-apocalyptic France that contrasts the darker plot of a butcher and landlord with a penchant for serving up the hired help. His plans may be disrupted this time, however, when his daughter falls for the new handyman and enlists the help of an underground society to save him. Work up an appetite for the new digital release of the film, which screens at the Museum of Fine Arts on Nov. 23-27. / Meghan Kavanaugh

Reviews by Brett Michel

The Accountant ★1/2 When you look at the cast for this misfire, which includes two Oscar winners (star Ben Affleck and J.K. Simmons) and two Oscar nominees (John Lithgow and Anna Kendrick), it sets up expectations that director Gavin O'Connor's ridiculous yet flat crime drama never once meets. Affleck plays Christian Wolff, the titular accountant. Perhaps it's his Asperger's syndrome that makes him so great with numbers. But it's his upbringing as a Army brat (played in flashbacks to his youth by Seth Lee) under the militaristic rule of his borderline abusive father (Robert C. Treveiler) that has made him just as good with a gun. After all, watching a plastic action hero like Affleck simply tapping on a calculator for more than two hours would be pretty boring, right? Screenwriter Bill Dubuque seems to think so; he may as well have titled his script The Assassin, since the ratio of number-crunching to bone-crunching here would look pretty stark on a spreadsheet. It's interesting to wonder what Affleck—who's built a nice second career as a director—might have done with this same script. Say what you will about his acting, but the former Cantabrigian knows how to pace a film and set a tone, two elements that are woefully underserved here. Instead, we're left with a mess of a movie that could have used a little levity—this lack of self-awareness is the film's real killer. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Arrival ★★1/2 When I first heard the strong word-of-mouth buzz about this science-fiction film from Denis Villeneuve (director of Prisoners, Sicario and the forthcoming Blade Runner sequel), I should have paid heed to the name of the picture's screenwriter: Eric Heisserer, the scribe behind Final Destination 5 and the misbegotten reboots of A Nightmare on Elm Street and The Thing. Though Heisserer is working with someone else's tale (Ted Chiang's Nebula Award-winning short story "Story of Your Life"), the thought-provoking ideas in his script begin to collapse the more you think about them. Nevertheless, while the spell lasts, Villeneuve (aided immeasurably by his longtime collaborator, composer Jóhann Jóhannsson) presents a compelling drama as linguistics expert Louise Banks (Amy Adams) and theoretical physicist Ian Donnelly (Jeremy Renner) race to communicate with the mysterious alien lifeforms aboard massive UFOs that suddenly appear around the planet. Also hindered by visuals that are too ambitious for its modest budget, the film is a noble, flawed effort. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Fenway, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Edge of Seventeen ★★★1/2 I wouldn't have guessed that this delicate comic drama marks the directorial debut of its writer/director, Kelly Fremon Craig, a woman with only one previous writing credit to her name (Post Grad, a 2009 comedy starring Michael Keaton and Alexis Bledel), but the guiding hand of producer James L. Brooks—the Academy Award winner behind classics such as Terms of Endearment, Broadcast News and As Good as It Gets—is visible in nearly every frame. Craig's character-driven charmer focuses on gawky high school junior Nadine (Hailee Steinfeld in a rich, heartbreaking performance), whose life is disrupted when her lone friend, Krista (Haley Lu Richardson), begins dating her "perfect" all-star older brother Darian (Blake Jenner). With her beloved father (Eric Keenleyside) dead and her relationship with her mother (Kyra Sedgwick) fractured, Nadine turns to her dry-witted history teacher (MVP Woody Harrelson), who becomes her sounding board and mentor, advising her though some of the awkward episodes that earned the film its R rating. See it with your daughter—if she's not too embarrassed to go with you. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Girl on the Train ★★ The basic plot of this mystery/thriller isn't so bad; it's likely a reason the Paula Hawkins novel it's based on has spent so long on the bestseller lists. However, Erin Cressida Wilson's adapted screenplay does a poor job of laying out a cohesive framework. Needlessly convoluted with confusing time jumps, the film also suffers from less-than-Hitchcockian direction by Tate Taylor, who was more at ease behind the camera of 2011's The Help and definitely more adept at handling the passage of time in 2014's James Brown biopic, Get on Up. Here, Taylor relies far too much on unflattering closeups and unnecessary slow motion, both of which distract from the lurid tale that could have benefitted from a different touch. Strangely, the action has been transplanted from the book's U.K. setting to upstate New York, even though British actress Emily Blunt has been cast as Rachel, the recently divorced, boozy protagonist and unreliable narrator of one-third of our tale. She's easily the best thing in the film, which centers on a missing person case while weaving in infidelity, childbearing and possibly murder. If only the thrills matched the mystery. (At Assembly Row, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Hacksaw Ridge ★★★ This is the first movie Mel Gibson has directed since 2006's Apocalypto, after Hollywood turned its back on him and his anti-Semitic ravings. Ah, but Hollywood loves a good redemption story, and Gibson is also the man who made 2004's The Passion of the Christ. Like that film, Hacksaw Ridge is both deeply religious and grotesquely violent. But then, it would be wrong to gloss over the horrors of World War II's Battle of Okinawa, which occupies the second half of Mad Mel's return to directing. But before he places us on the bloody battlefield, Gibson fills in the backstory of Desmond Doss, a Seventh-day Adventist hailing from the Blue Ridge Mountains in Virginia. As played by Andrew Garfield, Doss is a skinny kid who spends his days in church when he's not standing up to his shellshocked drunk of a dad (Hugo Weaving) or pursuing his future bride Dorothy (Teresa Palmer). These scenes are as corny as our hero is cornfed, and their conventionality extends to the scenes of basic training. But Gibson's picture hits its stride once we get to the meat of the story, when Desmond—a conscientious objector who refuses to even touch a gun—nevertheless saves the lives of some 75 men. The religious imagery that closes this true tale may be a bit much, but then, no one's ever accused Gibson of understatement. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Handmaiden ★★★1/2 "Inspired by" Sarah Waters' 2002 novel Fingersmith, which was set in Victorian England, this is very much the product of Park Chan-wook, the operatic director of 2003's Oldboy. Relocating the tale to his home of South Korea (after working in America for his first English-language film, 2013's disappointing Stoker), Park presents his latest genre hybrid—a romantic crime drama—in both Korean (subtitled in white) and Japanese (subtitled in yellow) as we follow the titular handmaiden, Sook-hee (Kim Tae-ri). As we soon discover, she's the daughter of a master thief who's following in her late mother's footsteps. Her latest scheme involves persuading her employer, Japanese heiress Lady Hideko (Kim Min-hee), to marry Sook-hee's co-conspirator (Ha Jung-woo), who's posing as a count. Alas, things get complicated—and a whole lot steamier—when Hideko takes a much larger interest in her new maid. The bold eroticism on display is just as fun as the eventual (and literal) gallows humor that works its way into the third act; this is a Park Chan-wook picture, after all! As such, there are also numerous plot twists that should please fans of the filmmaker, who masterfully controls every reversal and sumptuously framed shot, aided immeasurably by his longtime collaborators, cinematographer Chung Chung-hoon and composer Jo Yeong-wook. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Jack Reacher: Never Go Back ★★ I'm hard-pressed to think of a more fitting title for this sequel to 2012's under-appreciated Jack Reacher, a gritty, small-scale throwback to '80s action movies that starred a miscast Tom Cruise as Reacher, a crime-solving, ex-military drifter made popular in a series of 21 pulpy novels by British author Lee Child. The diminutive Cruise with his brown hair and matinee-idol looks is nowhere near a physical match for the Reacher on the page, a blond, 6-foot-5-inch tree trunk of a man whose looks are almost as rough as his methods. But then, Cruise is the producer of these films, so he can do what he wants. That being said, what he did the last time out was vastly superior, thanks in no small part to the first film's villain (German director Werner Herzog in an inspired bit of casting) and its writer/director, Christopher McQuarrie, who clearly enjoyed adapting the ninth novel (One Shot) in the Reacher literary canon. Alas, McQuarrie, who graduated to the big leagues with the deliriously entertaining Mission: Impossible – Rogue Nation, has become the shepherd of that long-running, Cruise-starring series, so he was unavailable to write or direct the Reacher follow-up. Instead, this adaptation of Child's 18th Reacher tale has been lackadaisically helmed by Edward Zwick, director of Cruise's other truly bad action film, 2003's The Last Samurai. Never Go Back, indeed. (At Assembly Row, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Loving ★★★ After venturing into science fiction with this spring's uneven Midnight Special, writer/director Jeff Nichols reunites a number of players from that film's cast for an earth-bound drama more in line with his previous character studies, 2007's Shotgun Stories, 2011's Take Shelter and 2012's Mud. Arkansas native Nichols knows the South—and its deeply-rooted racist past—which serves him well as he dramatizes the courage and commitment of Richard and Mildred Loving (Joel Edgerton and Ruth Negga), an interracial couple who fought a nearly decadelong battle for the right to live with their children as a family in their home state of Virginia. Their civil-rights case went all the way to the Supreme Court, bringing to an end anti-miscegenation laws in 1967, reaffirming not only the Lovings' right to marry, but solidifying the foundation of marriage for all who followed in their footsteps.

Eschewing manufactured drama, Nichols celebrates the quiet dignity of his subjects. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

MOONLIGHT ★★★★ Writer/director Barry Jenkins' sophomore film is a powerfully acted drama spread across three distinct acts, all focused on the same character, seen first as a child (Alex R. Hibbert), then as a teen (Ashton Sanders) and at last as an adult (Trevante Rhodes). Each chapter would stand as a strong short film if viewed independently, but the cumulative effect might just blindside you. Jenkins introduces us to Little (Hibbert) when he's a poor black youth living in a Miami housing project. Gradually, a local drug dealer named Juan (Mahershala Ali) and his girlfriend Teresa (R&B singer Janelle Monáe) become surrogate parents to Little. This doesn't sit well with Paula (Naomie Harris), Little's single mother, an addict who's hooked on the junk that Juan peddles. Sadly, she can't help taking out the resentment she feels toward Juan and Teresa on her quiet, "different" child. Exactly how different, we discover when Little breaks his usual silence to ask Juan, "What's a faggot?" Calmly and without judgment, Juan explains, "It's a word people use to make gay people feel bad." The boy then inquires, "Am I a faggot?" Juan warmly replies, "You might be gay, but you're not a faggot.... You gotta decide for yourself who you wanna be." By the final third, as our no-longer-little hero drives toward an oceanside date with fate, he not only embraces who he is, but the boy finally becomes a man. Bring tissues. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Queen of Katwe ★★★ After their modest success with 2014's Million Dollar Arm, Disney is back with another inspirational sports drama set in a foreign land. And although both are based on true stories, this tale of a young girl from rural Uganda who pursues her dream of becoming a chess champion doesn't rely on the trope of a white American who makes it possible, as John Hamm's character did in the former film when he traveled to India to tap cricket players who might excel at playing baseball. Instead, director Mira Nair (Monsoon Wedding) allows her film to be an East African story through and through, utilizing the native tongues of English and Swahili. As soccer player-turned-missionary Robert Katende (Selma's David Oyelowo) begins teaching strategic thinking and risk-taking to underprivileged youths through the game of chess, he recognizes the potential in 10-year-old Phiona Mutesi (luminous newcomer Madina Nalwanga), encouraging her to compete on a higher level. Alas, Phiona's mother (Lupita Nyong'o, an Oscar winner for 12 Years a Slave) would rather her daughter be more practical and sell corn to help keep a roof over their heads. OK, so William Wheeler's script (based on the book by Tim Crothers) isn't exactly breaking much new ground, but the winning performances greatly elevate this familiar story. (At Kendall Square, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

MUSIC

Edited by Alexandra Cavallo

GOOD TO BE KING There's no denying that Elle King, drink in hand, made an impression during her set at this spring's Boston Calling, and though reviews were split, the takeaway was unanimous: The LA-based rock/country/blues singer gives zero fucks. That's a theme that underlines both her bluesy, boozy brand of modern rockabilly and her persona—in refreshing contrast to pop princesses of similar pedigree. Many listeners are surprised to learn that she's the daughter of comedian Rob Schneider, as her music seems mined from Americana grit rather than Hollywood soil. Take her breakout hit, 2015's "Ex's & Oh's," an infectious anti-love ballad in which King howls cheerily about chewing boys up and spitting them out. King reigns supreme at a headlining show at the House of Blues on Nov. 21. / Alexandra Cavallo

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Sarah Hagman

GET IN FORMATION There's going to be plenty of flocking at Miller Yezerski Gallery, and we're not just talking about art lovers headed there. That's where you'll find photographer Thomas Jackson's Emergent Behavior series, inspired by swarm patterns seen in nature. He turns this organic phenomenon on its head by replacing the natural with the artificial in hovering installations of objects like tutus, cheese puffs, plastic bags and glow sticks, placing them in unlikely environments, from California coasts to rocky mounds in Santa Fe. The former magazine editor even pays homage to his previous career in a piece with fluttering pages from Vogue's unwieldy September issue. Buzz over to the South End to see more of Jackson's photos, on display Nov. 18 through Dec. 23. / Arden Stringer

ANTHONY!

Wednesday might be Prince Spaghetti Night in the North End, but the annual Spaghetti Dinner for the Women's Lunch Place took place on a Friday at the Fairmont Copley Plaza.

The fundraiser honoring the incomparable Estrellita Karsh had an art theme and began with a cocktail reception and silent auction of dozens of works by leading artists. On hand were such uber supporters as Michele and Howard Kessler, MFA head Matthew Teitelbaum and his other half, Susan Cohen, bibliophile Anne Bromer, the super sparkly Ellen Frank, Back Bay glamazon Christy Cashman, dashing do-gooder Mark Lippolt, public health hottie Greg Kane, banking heartthrob Kevin Walther, the gorgeous trifecta of Michele Lord, Pat Elliott and Carolyn Crowley, South End lovebirds Arnold Sapenter and Joseph Reed, Playbill publisher Tim Montgomery and the lovely Rita Fucillo, arts booster Suzanne Schultz, power couple Jim Manzi and Kay Calvert, software entrepreneur Dean Goodermote and his partner in crime, Diane Arnold, writer/photographer Robert Pushkar and real estate mack daddy Ken Tutunjian, to name a mere few.

The spaghetti and meatballs were delicious (and a welcome change from the usual beef tenderloin or chicken breast served at charity functions), prompting one guest to say, "Finally, a party with carbs."

Meanwhile, the evening's best exchange: "How old are your kids?"

"I want to say 3 and 5, because it sounds much better than 18 and 21."

YES, WE HAVE NO BANANAS

The WGBH Studios were transformed into an epic fiesta with food stations, a killer band and free-flowing booze for the Food Festivale to benefit Helping Hands.

The Improper was a proud sponsor of the event, which raises money to provide the severely disabled with monkey companions/helpers. Among the higher primates on hand were flawless event chair Lisa Flores, radio blabbermouth David O'Leary and the lovely Kathy, concierge extraordinaire Ann Heimlicher, timeless hipster Chris Young, Saks head honcho Joel Ellzey, brunette stunner Yuna Asriyan, smoldering surfer dude Max Moss, master of good times Beau Hodges, XV Beacon babe Deanna McGrath and one person who said, "I'm old enough to remember when the Sears catalogue was porn."

The food was outstanding, the silent auction was off the hook, and the raffle was drool-inducing. Meanwhile, the evening's most inappropriate comment came from the person who said, "I need a monkey helper who knows how to fold laundry."

LOST IN A MASQUERADE

All the good-looking people in formalwear and masks lent an Eyes Wide Shut vibe to the Mandarin Oriental when TV personalities Giuliana and Bill Rancic hosted UnMask Cancer.

A fundraiser for Dana-Farber co-chaired by filmmaker Sam Slater and his stunning wife, Jessica, the event attracted the likes of retired NFL stars Matt Light and Sammy Morris with their gorgeous other halves, Susie and Leslie, Boston Spirit publisher David Zimmerman and red-hot mama Kris Wickham, the dangerously sexy Alejo Sepulveda, real estate babe Susie Shortsleeve, the ubiquitous Michael Tarshi, delectable designer Melissa Hulburt, handsome tech guy Brian Sinkiewicz, Persian smoothie Ali Zosherafatain, custom furniture genius Erik Rueda, brunette stunner Trish Encina, the hale and hearty Michael Carucci, real estate titan Arthur Winn, handsome shutterbug Joel Benjamin with his silver fox, Dan Norman, fashion plate Harley Bilzerian with her equally stylish parents, Alan and Be, matinee idol Ed Amaral, Croatian goddess Paulina Neely and countless equally fabulous others.

Dinner was fantastic, the booze flowed accordingly, and the event raised more than $200K, which is nothing to sneeze at. The evening's best remark: "I never met a tequila I didn't like." ◆

THAT'S A WRAP!

I'M AN INCORRIGIBLE URBANITE WHO has never owned a car and likes it that way, except occasionally during December, when hauling gifts on the commuter rail leaves me envying all that trunk space in Santa's sled. So that's one reason I dig this year's gift guide, which has Sierra Baskind rounding up stocking stuffers and other relatively petite presents that won't weigh you down when holiday party-hopping, from cuff links made from shotgun shells by a local sibling duo to bourbon-flavored toothpicks created by a company that plants 100 trees for every one felled. Elsewhere, Sarah Hagman makes the season bright with a trend piece on standout metallic shoes, and I check out four fun pop-up shops that have sprung up for the holidays. Meanwhile, Jonathan Soroff chats with our talented cover subject, Boston Conservatory alum Keesha Sharp, and Lydia Santangelo gifts us with a fashion spread of denim styles that are anything but everyday. Happy holidays.

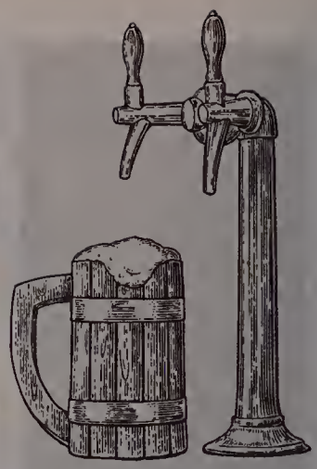
SEE THE LIGHT

A CAMBRIDGE 'HOOD GAINS A CRAFT TAPROOM AND CAFE

SWEET SPOT: Lamplighter is located between Central and Inman at 284 Broadway.

Keeping the Lights On

On walks through their Cambridge neighborhood, Cayla Marvil and AC Jones would frequently pass an old car garage and think, "That would make a great spot for a brewery," Marvil recalls.



The couple, who met in college and "bonded over a love of beer," were already home brewing together, bouncing recipes off friends and dreaming about opening a brewery of their own. And they knew they wanted to open it in Cambridge. "To us, it was crazy that a city of this size didn't have a distribution-focused brewery," Marvil says. "We knew we could do it faster and cheaper if we went to some outlying industrial park, but the taproom was a main focus for us wanting to do this."

"This" being Lamplighter Brewing, which the pair opened in that old garage in September, selling growlers to a steady crowd of friends from the neighborhood and curious passersby. Lamplighter exclusively brews ales—the favored style for the couple and head brewer Tyler Fitzpatrick, who previously honed his hops skills at Mystic, Wormtown and Cape Cod Brewing. "We're definitely trying to focus on funkier things," Marvil says. "A lot of Brettanomyces fermentations, a lot of sours."

But selling growlers was only step one, and in November, they unveiled a taproom that's open till midnight Tuesday through Sunday. "It's the best way for us to share our beer, because we can explain what we're doing and why those flavors are there," Marvil says. "I think it's really unique to have a brewery like this in a downtown city setting.... You'll see brewpubs, sure, but to get 10,000 square feet in the middle of the city is really cool." That space isn't going to waste. Aside from the taproom, which currently offers about eight rotating beers on tap, there's a kitchen slinging pretzels and peanuts—expect hot dogs and tater tots in early December—as well as Longfellows, a cafe pouring Barrington coffee (including mint mojito cold brew). "It's a similar demographic, the people who are drinking craft coffee and craft beer, I think," Marvil says.

To make that demographic feel at home, they've appointed the taproom like a stylish 20-something's pad, with a makeshift "living room" complete with a couch, a throw rug, books and board games. "We want it to be very community oriented," Marvil says. "We live in this neighborhood, and we know a lot of people, so we just wanted a place where we could hang out." Accordingly, they plan to host frequent community events, including weekly trivia nights, a beer and cheese pairing night and an oyster night in collaboration with Island Creek.

"We just need beds in here," Marvil jokes, "and then you'll never have to leave!" / Alexandra Cavallo

ON TAP

Lamplighter isn't the only new hop-stop around. Here are a few more buzzy openings farther afield.

START LINE BREWING
Opened in mid-November, this brewery and taproom pours pale ales, stouts and IPAs made with hydroponic hops out of Water Fresh Farm in Hopkinton. Guests can also take home their brews—which include a rotating line of running-themed beers—in 32-ounce crowlers or 64-ounce growlers.

DOWN THE ROAD BEER CO.
Joining the likes of Night Shift and the recently opened Bone Up Brewing Co., Down the Road is set to open a 12,000-square-foot taproom in Everett early next year. Fans of its flagship Pukwudgie Pale Ale and new brews like the White Hart Helles can expect 10 to 16 beers on draft, arcade games and possibly a beer garden come warmer weather.

JACK'S ABBY
More evidence that sour beers are having a moment: Jack's Abby's announcement of a new barrel room devoted to expanding its sour program. Opening this winter, the 30,000-square-foot Springdale Barrel Room will sit adjacent to the Framingham brewery's beer hall and house a 12-tap bar pouring a variety of sours, along with saisons and other brews outside of Jack's Abby's established portfolio.

PAGU PICKS: The eclectic menu features dishes like uni fried rice and squid-ink oyster bao.

First Taste / Matt Martinelli

HEART OF THE MENU

TRACY CHANG'S PAGU WILL SERVE CUISINE FROM A LIFETIME FULL OF RECIPES.

PAGU
310 Mass. Ave., Cambridge
gopagu.com

Tracy Chang constantly fields the same question, especially now that PAGU is set to open in December on Mass. Ave. in Cambridge.

"People say, 'Oh, have you gotten the menu done yet?'" Chang says. "I've been working on the menu all my life. Of course I have the menu done."

With plans for breakfast, lunch and dinner seven days a week, that menu will be quite extensive once PAGU is operating at full strength. All the items will have some Spanish or Japanese influence or ingredients, with Chang aiming for an izakaya-meets-tapas spot, serving small plates as well as large shareable items. Breakfast will include dishes such as a waffle—a potato-based waffle made with egg and smoked mozzarella—and a congee bowl with cured pork and a 62-degree egg. Lunch items will range from a soy-braised pork-belly bao to croquetas such as curry crab and bacalao. The dinner menu is set to include a Cornish hen with sticky rice, squid-ink oyster bao, Guchi's Midnight Ramen (from her former pop-up) and a childhood favorite: fried rice with Taiwanese sausage, peas and scallion oil.

"Fried rice was the first thing I ever learned how to make, and it was before I was tall enough to reach the stove. It was something I could do with my parents every Sunday," Chang says. "We still like to make fried rice and make it the best we can, and each time better."

Chang has a backstory for just about every dish at PAGU. A quick rundown of the dessert menu has her reminiscing about making matcha cookies in college and harking back to a black-sesame pudding made with tofu that she cooked up while working at O Ya.

"I end up being obsessed about what I'm cooking, and I try to make my own version of it," Chang says. "It's like, 'Hey, this is something we're studying, where we're trying to recreate a technique or we're trying to pull all the dairy out of it and use whipped tofu.'"

Diners will get a good look at Chang and company at work in the open kitchen, lined with a 14-seat counter and set at the heart of the 100-seat space. A bar stocked with sake and basque cider, among other offerings, runs along the left side of the space, and banquette seating as well as hightops and lowtops fill the rest of the restaurant, including a 20-seat dining room that can be closed off for private events. A 60-seat patio is expected to lure folks during the warmer months, and to-go items and coffee will be available from a few carts near the door so customers can pop in quickly for breakfast and lunch.

"It's intentionally designed so that people can interact around the cart. I want to see if it works," Chang says. "We're taking a page from the Apple store design model, where you're standing around something together and looking at it together. You're standing next to someone, not behind a glass. It feels less like a transaction and more like a conversation."

WINTER WARMER: Urban Hearth's current casserole is a hearty Middle Eastern stew.

Good Eats: Love Shak

The menu changes frequently at Cambridge's new Urban Hearth, a cafe that chef/owner Erin Miller describes as being "based in the global philosophy of the slow food movement," but diners can always expect a seasonal casserole hot out of the brick oven. Through the winter—until fresh veggies and their house-canned counterparts are depleted—it's shakshuka, a Middle Eastern stew of tomatoes, red peppers, onions, garlic, harissa and spices that's plated in an individually sized cast-iron pan and topped with two eggs and feta cheese. A popular choice for breakfast and lunch, the dish is accompanied by slices of focaccia bread that are perfect for sopping up runny yolks. / Meghan Kavanaugh

HOLIDAY VISITORS

Attention shoppers: Here are four festive pop-ups worth popping into this season. / Jacqueline Houton

Quincy-based womenswear brand A Ruby is popping up at Copley Place through at least Jan. 15, bringing not only its staple leggings, boyfriend jackets and crisp white button-ups but a collab with South Ender Dylan Ascher of Dylanium Knits. The self-taught knitwear designer has made fingerless mitts, scarves and pom-pom hats, and he's taking orders for custom handmade sweaters (place yours by Dec. 5 to get one under the tree by Dec. 25).

Copley Place, 100 Huntington Ave., Boston, arubynet

Dozens of vendors are descending on City Hall Plaza for its inaugural holiday market on Dec. 2-3, but crafty types should be sure to visit the Etsy Artists of Boston chalet. It's stocked with a rotating selection of ceramics, edibles, jewelry, paintings, woodwork and fiber art, like these cacti crocheted by Jillian Audrey of Islay's Terrace, who often draws inspiration from the three years she spent in the Southwest.

City Hall Plaza, Boston, facebook.com/etsyartistsboston

Through Jan. 2, Nantucket's TownPool is packing the old Staples space with a boatload of preppy presents from Colby Davis' nautically inspired jewelry and Fish Wags' worsted slippon pets to Harding-Lane's needlepoint caps and Resilosa's one-of-a-kind apparel made from vintage Turkish rugs. Come for the shopping, stay for the nine-hole mini-golf course in back.

899 Boylston St., Boston, townpool.com

Since October, The Shop has served as Back Bay's blank canvas, welcoming a new pop-up each week or so. Next up, from Nov. 29 through Dec. 4, will house wares by homegrown footwear brand Vans. Athletics, helmed by a husband-and-wife team who've worked for Reebok, Puma, New Balance and Nike. They're also hosting free daily workouts, like a fighter conditioning class led by boxing trainer Pat Montes.

HOME COOKING

Joe Bastianich opened his first restaurant, Becco, in the early '90s in New York with his mother, Lidia, before teaming up with Mario Batali to open dozens of restaurants worldwide, including Babbo at Fan Pier in 2015. The Boston College alum is also a partner in Eataly Boston and, before the Nov. 29th opening, he chished about the Prus 45,000-square-foot newcomer, which features a retail space with a number of local purveyors as well as restaurants, a coffee shop and take-out counters. / Matt Martinell

WHAT WILL MAKE EATALY BOSTON DIFFERENT FROM OTHER EATALYS? We try to insert so much of the local culture. It's going to be dedicated to seafood and fishermen. I had a boat that ran for many years out of Chatham. We had an all-species permit and fished for giant bluefin tuna. I had a captain named Pete who was the son of a whaler. Just that sort of connection with local fishermen, and all the fish will be sourced locally.

A LOT OF OUT-OF-TOWN CHEFS HAVE BEEN ONE-AND-DONE. BUT EATALY WILL BE THE SECOND SPOT IN BOSTON FROM YOU GUYS. WHAT'S BEEN THE KEY? Boston is kind of a second hometown for us. I spent my whole life summering on the Cape and I ran my boat out of Hyannis for 20 years. I lived there, went to college there and did post-college there. We kind of feel at home there. And it's close enough that you can get in the car and you're there in three hours.

WHAT DO YOU REMEMBER ABOUT THE BOSTON FOOD SCENE FROM COLLEGE? I remember in freshman year 1984, they took us to No Name Restaurant. And we had three cases of beer under the table, and that was my first dining experience in Boston. I worked as a bartender at Mary Ann's in Cleveland Circle and other places on Comm. Ave. in the BC area. So I had some food-and-drink experience in Boston early on. I remember Souper Salad in Newton. We used to go to that. ALL FOR ALSATIAN

What makes Alsatian wine so special? With its historic vineyards sheltered behind the massive rain shadow of the Vosges Mountains, this northeastern French region enjoys a cool, arid, sunny climate. Since harvesting doesn't take place until mid-autumn, Alsace's white wines tend to unfold in the glass with vivid aromatic complexity. Their flavors can inspire, none more so than riesling, which tastes reliably dry and pure. This is the classic alternative for a sauvignon blanc drinker who wants to branch out, although the style is gentler. These three are superb and versatile with food, as well as reasonably priced. / Sandy Block

HUGEL "CLASSIC" RIESLING, 2014

One of the historic multigenerational families of the region, Hugel specializes in dry mineral-accented riesling from some of the best clay and limestone vineyards in and around Riquewihr. This vintage is lemony, with a thrilling crisp apple note that is ideal with raw shellfish.

$22, Brookline Liquor Mart, Chestnut Hill

LUCIEN ALBRECHT "RESERVE" RIESLING, 2015

With notes of lemon zest, lime, white flowers and dried green herbs, this assertively scented riesling opens on the palate with layers of smooth stone fruit and melon flavors. It's round and mellow in texture, with creamy, smooth notes that would pair well with a delicate fish fillet.

KUENTZ-BAS "TRADITION" RIESLING, 2014

Bone dry, bracing and stony in flavor, this riesling walks a tightrope between freshness and a range of thrilling citrus accents. It's not exactly a turkey wine, but you could certainly enjoy it with a roasted chicken rubbed with thyme.

$20, The Wild Duck Wine & Spirits, Boston

Out of 25 YEARS THE VAULT

The Improper is celebrating its 25th anniversary in 2016, and to properly mark the occasion, we've been digging through the archives for gems from issues past. Behold, some bygone presents, from must-have boots of the moment to the gifts we really wanted to give.

Nov. 11, 1992

Back in the early '90s, we recommended skipping the popular Cabbage Patch doll in favor of a PC present like the locally published Bias-Free Word Finder. "Examples to live by are 'Sewer Hole,' not 'Manhole,' 'Gripe Session,' not 'Bitch Session,' " we wrote, noting that it's a gift that "won't break your pocketbook (or 'money holder')."

Nov. 9, 1994

Our current book reviewer and then-everything reviewer Mopsy Strange Kennedy had a hot tip for gift givers in 1994: Ugg boots. Back then, the eyesores that are inexplicably still popular among the North Face fleece- and Lululemon yoga pant-wearing college frosh set were brand new. As Mopsy put it: "The laid-back natural crowd, including Sting, Willie Nelson, Robert Redford and Kris Kristofferson, are all Ugg-niks." Ugh.

Dec. 2, 1998

In a piece titled "Best Wishes: An Improper List of Holiday Gifts We'd Love to Give," we laid on the snark—hard—as we laid out exactly what we'd like Santa to send down notable Bostonians' chimneys. Like for venerable BSO conductor Keith Lockhart: "A fashion consultant who will advise him against posing for photographs in outfits that make him look like even more of a jackass than he actually does." Sorry, Keith!

INSTANT HIT

A PHOTOGRAPHER PAYS TRIBUTE TO THE CAMBRIDGE-BORN POLAROID CAMERA

Polaroid: The Magic Material* by Florian Kaps
Published by Frances Lincoln, 256 pages, $30

IN 1943, LONG BEFORE SMARTPHONES DELIVERED instant pictures, Edwin Land developed the idea for Polaroid's miraculous camera, responding to his daughter's desire to see vacation photos right away. The camera he invented spat out an actual picture whose covering unpeeled like a Band-Aid—and voila!

Sadly, the original Cambridge-based company went bankrupt in the 2000s, and the new owners of its assets ceased producing Polaroid film. But Austrian photographer Florian Kaps and his collaborators set out to revive the medium, buying production machinery and calling the notion the Impossible Project. Here, Kaps lovingly charts Polaroid's history and his own quirky enterprises that have helped keep this ever-evolving analog wonder alive.

The Polaroids in this book include experiments, some using crazy chemicals, high pressure, microwaving or complex layering techniques to produce photographs with an often dreamy aesthetic. Others, imitating the painter Rothko's style of modern abstractions, come in hot, bright painterly colors that no digital clicker could deliver. A 1974 picture shows Andy Warhol being strangled and looking oddly amused. One surreal-looking shot has artist Max Rada Dada posed in a turban with dozens of little pictures swirling around his face, suggesting a kind of live action, though it's happening in a still photo. Skeptical, but certainly fascinated, Kaps describes Chicago bellhop Ted Serios' "thoughtography," paranormal experiments that allegedly captured images wafting through his mind. Kaps' own mischievous and creative experimentation is also on display, and his book reveals how this iconic camera continues to act like a soulful, imaginative paintbrush.

FROM PAGE 157: What has happened to the intimate, tingling world of private erotic photography initiated by Polaroid in 1948? As digital images have increased in number and detail, they have lost one important element that Polaroids always added to erotic photography: a deeply romantic and intimate touch that even the most explicit Polaroids always have. ◆

DAYS OF WINE & MUD

A STAY IN CALISTOGA, CALIFORNIA, SOOTHES THE BODY AND EXCITES THE PALATE.

A LITERAL BLAST FROM THE PAST SHAPED the Calistoga of today. A volcano erupted a few million years ago, leaving behind volcanic ash, subterranean geothermal bodies of water and soil that grapes love. Located 75 miles from San Francisco at the northernmost point of the Napa Valley, Calistoga has been a site for wine-making since the 1800s, and folks have been coming here to experience the hot springs for thousands of years before that, starting with the native Wappo people. In 1880, Robert Louis Stevenson spent his two-month honeymoon here, documenting his experience in a travelogue that noted, "Calistoga itself seems to repose on a mere film above a boiling, subterranean lake." He also commented, "Wine in California is still in the experimental stage."

Today, 136 years later, those experiments have been extremely successful. Napa Valley boasts more than 500 wineries, with 60-plus in tiny Calistoga, population 5,261. And still bubbling beneath the surface are the hot springs, tamed into natural mineral-infused pools at area resorts. One of the first was the brainchild of Sam Brannan, a native of Saco, Maine, who found financial success in San Francisco in the 1850s and decided to invest in the hot springs to the north. Inspired by similar springs in Saratoga, New York, he founded both a resort and a town in the 1860s. Nancy Levenberg, executive director of the Napa County Historical Society, traces the name to the grand opening of the resort. Champagne flowed; Brannan partook. When he spoke to the crowd, intending to declare the town "the Saratoga of California," in his inebriation he instead proclaimed it "the Calistoga of Sarafornia." The name stuck.

The best way to "take the waters" in Calistoga is to stay at one of the nine properties with geothermal pools. The style of service varies but generally consists of three parts—mud, waters, rest—with an attendant to lead you through the process. Destinations include the Indian Springs Resort and Spa, which evolved from the resort Brannan founded; the property sprawls across 17 acres and features an Olympic-sized mineral pool. Then there's the Calistoga Spa Hot Springs, a hotel established in the 1920s that offers several oversized mud tubs, separated for men and women. You get naked and lower yourself into a concoction of Calistoga mineral water, volcanic ash and imported peat, which makes for a more buoyant mud. Rest your head against an inflated pillow, close your eyes and feel the deep warmth penetrate aching muscles. The mud soak is followed by a mineral bath—warm, silky, soothing. Finally, you settle into a curtained-off bed, where you lie back and return to room temperature, feeling cleansed and rejuvenated. A bonus: The spa's four mineral pools are open late into the night, and swimming under the stars is a delight you can enjoy year round since the water's so warm.

Once you've sufficiently experienced the Calistoga mud and mineral waters, it's time to indulge in another liquid. Wine tastings start at about $15 for a flight and go up with various amenities. Begin with a stroll through downtown, where tasting rooms include Huge Bear Wines, located in a converted bank, and Vermeil Wines, run by a former NFL coach. Wineries further afield include Chateau Montelena, which helped put Napa Valley on the map when its chardonnay placed first in the 1976 Judgment of Paris competition, a coup documented in the 2008 film Bottle Shock. Castello di Amorosa is indeed located in a castle, built in the style of a 13th-century Tuscan structure. And the Greek island of Mykonos inspired the architecture of Sterling Vineyards, situated on a hill 300 feet above town. An air tram takes you up to the winery, offering gorgeous views.

It's easy to plan your own wine tour, especially with a Winter in the Wineries Passport, a $50 pass that includes tastings at 15 wineries. Time slots do fill up, so consider booking tours in advance. If you're staying in town, the Vine is a shuttle that will take you to and from 17 Calistoga wineries, eliminating the need for a designated driver.

One cannot live on wine alone, and fortunately Calistoga has excellent dining options. Start with a breakfast at Cafe Sarafornia, with tables inside and out. Solbar at Solage resort has fantastically creative seasonally inspired fare for brunch, lunch and dinner, with an excellent wine list. And Sam's Social Club at Indian Springs is helmed by chef Shaun McGrath, a native of Western Massachusetts. The facility, open since 2015, is also a brewery that makes use of local organic hops—yet another source of liquid refreshment in a town rightly renowned for them. ◆

HAVANA NIGHTS: Chef Roberto Niubo turns out a wide range of Cuban cuisine in a festive space.

FESTIVAL CUBANO

DOÑA HABANA DRESSES UP CUBAN CUISINE FOR A RAUCOUS PARTY.

BOSTON'S RESIDENTIAL NEIGHBORHOODS are dotted with modest little outposts of terrific Latin Caribbean cuisine, with its beguiling fusion of native, European and African flavors. Finding that food with a bit of upmarket atmosphere is tougher. Restaurateurs Hector and Nivia Piña first filled that vacuum when they opened Roxbury's Merengue, Boston's most glamorous Dominican restaurant, more than 20 years ago. Their second restaurant, the South End's Vejigantes, opened in 2012, serving Puerto Rican food and cocktails with similar verve and polish. Their newest, Doña Habana, brings the same flash and sex appeal to the service of Cuban cuisine in a pair of beautiful, festive dining rooms near Boston Medical Center.

Stepping into Doña Habana from the grim, gritty no man's land surrounding the intersection of Mass. Ave. and Melnea Cass is a Dorothy-awakening-in-Oz moment. The stunning space features zebrawood floors, walls covered with vivid photo-realistic murals of bygone Havana street scenes and accents of sea and sunset colors; the front end of a pre-Revolución '57 Chevy in Tropical Turquoise paint protrudes from one mural. Cuban music bounces on the stereo, and the rooms frequently hum with the fizzy, joyful chatter of large-party wedding showers and quinceañeras.

With a bar in each dining room, the party atmosphere is underscored by a fat drinks menu featuring 53 mojito variants ($11-$13), a bevy of margaritas ($11-$12, $20 for a version set on fire) and hot-climate cocktails like a nicely executed caipirinha ($12), the unsurprisingly sweet Saoco ($12) of sugar cane juice and rum and the Guantanamo ($12), a rum-and-citrus potion given a butterscotch accent with amaretto. There are large-format drinks like La Paloma ($85 for a 96-ounce bowlful), red and white sangrias ($11/glass, $25/pitcher), a short list of pedestrian macro beers ($5-$6) and a modest 30-bottle wine list ($8-11/glass, $28-$125/bottle, most under $60), many of them sparklers. Caffeinators can turn to serviceable if not very strong Cuban coffees ($2-$5) like the lagrima ($4), a 1-to-3 mix of coffee and hot milk. Celebratory drinking is a clear priority here.

Chef Roberto Niubo's menu covers a broad range of traditional Cuban foods, starting with a small-bites section that makes for marvelous, shareable drinking food. Crisp-shelled, barely oily empanadas ($8 for two) with mildly spiced fillings of chicken, pork or beef offer a promising start. Chicharrónes de puerco ($8) are a delectable pile of crispy, skin-on cubes of pork belly. The fiercely garlicky mojo sauce served with the long, skinny plantain chips that are mariquitas ($7) could make cardboard seem tasty. Croquetas de jamón ($8) are a classic bar snack: finely chopped ham in creamy bechamel wrapped in a crunchy deep-fried breadcrumb coating. Mini cubanitos ($12) present the classic Cuban sandwich of roast pork, ham, pickles and Swiss cheese as three sliders on softish rolls, but need more yellow mustard. La caleta ($22) fills four plantain cups with shredded beef, ground beef, garlic shrimp and fried shredded beef, a nice array of bright and savory flavors.

Entrees demonstrate less consistency. Tamal en cazuela ($10), a homely, substantial bowl of cornmeal porridge topped with big chunks of roast pork, yields surprising depth of flavor: delicious and satisfying. Caldo de mariscos y pescado ($26) is a pretty seafood stew of shrimp and squid with a big, handsome, whole red snapper in the middle, but the wan tomato broth is underseasoned, the advertised lobster apparently replaced sans notice with mussels. Rancho guajiro ($20), slow-roasted pork shoulder atop starchy batons of yuca frita (fried cassava), leaves on enough fat to counter its slightly overcooked dryness, but the onions are half-raw, showing none of the expected caramelization. Mercifully, ropa vieja ($16), braised shredded flank steak with sauteed red peppers, aromatics and sofrito, is superb: tender and vibrantly flavored. Included sides like tostones (flattened, crisp-fried slices of unripe plantains) or black beans with white rice are likewise excellent, as is a casserole of garbanzos fritos con chorizo ($10), chickpeas sauteed in tomato sauce with good kielbasa-like sausage.

Every party needs a sweet ending, so the short list of desserts includes pudín de pan y dulce de leche ($8), a Cuban-style slice of firm, sticky-sweet bread pudding, and hojaldre de guayaba ($6), a tender turnover of choux pastry filled with guava chunks. Then there's El Capitolio ($15), the scorpion bowl of Cuban desserts, an insane-looking tower of ice cream and chocolate syrup in a mug topped with two donuts, whipped cream and M&M's.

Service is sweet and amiable, but waitstaff and the kitchen appear to struggle at times to pay equal attention to smaller parties when a bigger celebration is going on. We noticed long waits between courses on more than one visit, ingredients going missing (where are the grilled onions on our chicharrónes?), difficulty procuring basics (like sharing bowls for the caldo) and lukewarm empanadas. This is the Piñas' largest restaurant yet, and nearly three months in, some scaling issues clearly persist. Burnish out these rough edges, and Doña Habana may graduate from the place everyone goes to celebrate Abuelita's 80th birthday or tear it up on weekend nights over bocadillos, drinks and music, to a cultivator of loyal weeknight regulars. Doña Habana is an endearing, gorgeous, incredibly vivacious lady; she just needs to work on a few of her dance steps. ◆

Q: WHAT'S THE BEST WAY TO HAVE SKIN THAT LOOKS RADIANT FOR HOLIDAY PARTIES?

A: The holidays are a time when we want to look our best. There are lots of photo ops, parties and family gatherings. As you plan your wardrobe and make a hair appointment, remember to also make an appointment for a skin care treatment.

Skin cannot look radiant if it is not well cleansed and well exfoliated. A great option is a light chemical peel, microdermabrasion, or a comprehensive facial with the addition of a light exfoliation. All of these treatments can be done in 30 to 60 minutes and the effects will last for the duration of the holiday season.

The best treatment option the day before or the day of an event is hydrosonic skin therapy. Your skin will truly glow and be "plumped up" through ultrasonic infusion of hydrating serums. Time to call SkinHealth for your appointment! Happy Holidays!

TURN THE TIDES

KENNETH LONERGAN'S LATEST MASTERPIECE HAS A FUNNY WAY OF LOOKING AT GRIEF

MANCHESTER BY THE SEA ★★★★

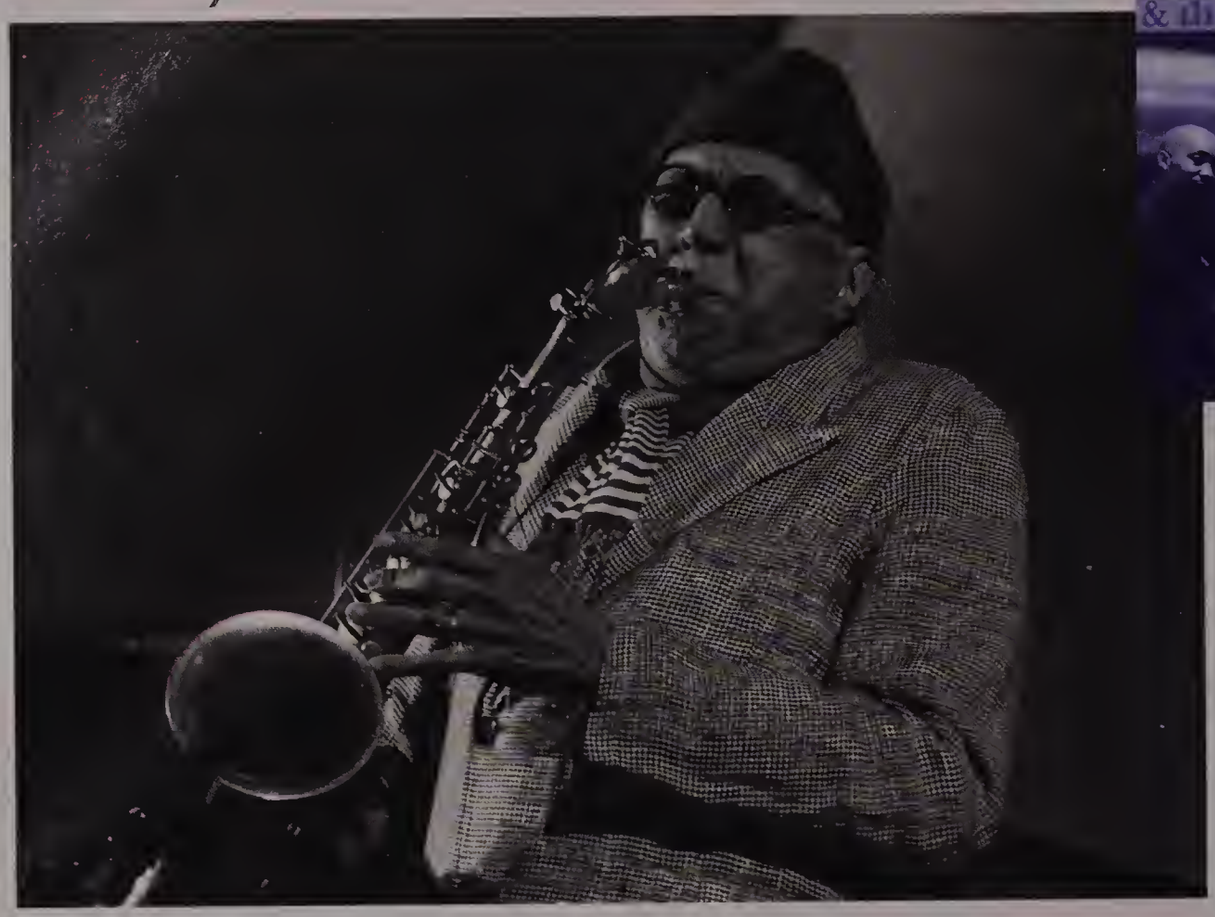
Starring Casey Affleck, Kyle Chandler, Lucas Hedges, C.J. Wilson, Heather Burns, Tate Donovan, Josh Hamilton, Kara Hayward, Anna Baryshnikov, Tom Kemp, Ben O'Brien, Matthew Broderick, Gretchen Mol and Michelle Williams. Written and directed by Kenneth Lonergan. At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.

FRAMED AS AN INCREDIBLY SAD STORY of a loner whose life has been decimated by a single late-night moment of bad judgment, writer/director Kenneth Lonergan's third consecutive masterpiece surprised the hell out of me. Given its hugely buzzed-about debut at last January's Sundance Film Festival, it was a fairly safe bet that I'd respond well to Manchester by the Sea, the latest drama from the noted playwright, which he set and shot in the Cape Ann region of northern Massachusetts. My expectations were only heightened by my love for his previous pictures, 2000's brother/sister drama You Can Count on Me and 2011's Margaret, a messy film made even messier when it was released into theaters in a badly compromised version (Lonergan's longer cut is well worth tracking down on video). But I was wholly unprepared for just how much a movie so raw and unflinching in its observations about death and its effect on the living could make me laugh.

A good deal of the humor comes from the lived-in, naturalistic interactions between Lee Chandler (Falmouth-born, Cambridge-raised Casey Affleck) and his 16-year-old nephew, Patrick (Lucas Hedges, impressing after small roles in Wes Anderson's Moonrise Kingdom and The Grand Budapest Hotel). We first meet them as they ride in the rear of the fishing boat owned by Lee's older brother and Patrick's dad, Joe (The Wolf of Wall Street's Kyle Chandler). Ah, but this lighthearted scene, which finds Lee gently making fun of Patrick while they fish (to the obvious delight of Joe), takes places in happier times, during one of the periodic flashbacks that Lonergan uses to punctuate the present.

It's a purgatorial existence as grim as the gray skies captured by cinematographer Jody Lee Lipes.

In that present, Lee has withdrawn from life. For reasons that won't be revealed till later, he's abandoned his titular hometown for a basement hovel an hour away in Quincy, where he holes up when he's not drinking, fighting or toiling as a janitor. It's a purgatorial existence as grim as the gray skies captured by cinematographer Jody Lee Lipes. Yet Lonergan and his talented editor Jennifer Lame (who's cut the last few Noah Baumbach pictures with equally great precision and timing) mine quite a few laughs during the montage that establishes our hermitic antihero's daily routine of shoveling snow from the ground and shit from plugged toilets, all while remaining emotionally constipated himself.



Not 15 minutes into the film's 2-hour, 17-minute running time, though, a little bit of life creeps back into Lee as a fateful phone call causes him to spring into action. He may be an introverted shell of his former self, but Lee is fiercely loyal to his family, and he'd do anything to see his beloved brother Joe one last time before congestive heart failure claims him—even if that means setting foot back in Manchester-by-the-Sea, a close-knit town whose inhabitants (including Lonergan in a humorous cameo) are prone to calling Lee a "fucking asshole" to his face.

Alas, in keeping with the bad luck that keeps turning up for Lee like a bad penny, he arrives too late. And with Joe's soused ex-wife (Gretchen Mol) long out of the picture, Lee has to break the news of the death to Patrick. What's more, he discovers that Joe has named him the teenager's sole guardian. While it's easy to see how Joe might have thought this responsibility would give Lee something to live for, we come to realize how terrible a gamble it may be once Lonergan reveals the devastating event that tore Lee's own marriage apart.

It's heartbreaking to witness what Lee has been through, which Affleck masterfully conveys as he practically swallows the short, clipped sentences from Lonergan's script. The talented thespian—an Oscar nominee for his supporting turn in 2007's The Assassination of Jesse James by the Coward Robert Ford—may be best known as Ben's younger brother, but this perception should change for good once audiences see him opposite Michelle Williams, who will likely shatter you in her small but integral role as Lee's ex-wife, Randi. Don't be surprised if you finally see this three-time Academy Award nominee walking onto the stage of the Dolby Theatre in Hollywood in February to collect her first Oscar, alongside Affleck and two-time writing nominee Lonergan.

Lonergan is extraordinarily attuned to the way people talk and has a knack for casting just the right performers to mine both pathos and humor from his peerless dialogue. But Manchester by the Sea, one of the richest dramas of this year or any other, is also about what the characters can't say to one another—and how the silences separate them. Lonergan trusts his audiences to do some of the talking, and they're sure to discuss his films long after the lights have come up. ◆

CHARLES LLOYD & THE MARVELS play Scullers Jazz Club on Dec. 2-3.

Music / Paul Robicheau

DREAM WEAVER

A GENRE-CROSSING JAZZ ELDER STRIVES FOR ENLIGHTENMENT.

As our country rattles in a state of division and uncertainty, veteran saxophonist/flutist Charles Lloyd soldiers on with his mission, sharing pensive, spiritual jazz that serves as sonic food for the soul.

"Every time I take the bandstand, it is another chance to tell the truth," Lloyd, 78, says via email from a tour stop in Germany. "The music changes the molecules in the atmosphere, and through sound we create a harmonious world, if even for one night."

Lloyd conjures natural harmony with his latest band, the Marvels, supplementing his longtime rhythm section of bassist Reuben Rogers and drummer Eric Harland with silvery-toned guitarists Bill Frisell and pedal-steel specialist Greg Leisz.

"Greg and Bill have been playing together for years and have amazing telepathy," Lloyd says. "Bill and I share a deep love for each other. We are both Pisces. He is an extreme sensitive and a creative soul. We don't need to talk about the music—we share our thoughts through sound."

That's clear on the Marvels' quietly penetrating debut, I Long to See You, released in January and a wellspring for Dec. 2-3 shows at Scullers Jazz Club. The album opens with a majestic, smoldering version of Bob Dylan's "Masters of War," stretched into an eight-minute rumination. "I felt it was time again—I wish that was not so," Lloyd says of the anti-war song penned by his onetime neighbor in Greenwich Village. "There are probably many [listeners] who don't know the lyrics and hear it only as a strong, rhythmic instrumental piece. For those who know the words, I think it has an added dimension."

"We don't need to talk about the music—we share our thoughts through sound."

Lloyd originally wanted to be a singer ("I developed a love for the saxophone with the realization that it could become my voice," he says), and he enlisted vocalists for two other covers. "You Are So Beautiful" features Norah Jones. "I have always heard Norah in my mind's ear singing with me," he says. "She made the song ethereal and dreamy." And Willie Nelson graces "Last Night I Had the Strangest Dream." "Willie has represented independence and freedom for a long, long time," Lloyd says. "His road-weary voice is particularly poignant, paired with the lyrics."

I Long to See You also showcases Lloyd's compositions in a pair of his rerecorded mid-'60s pieces, plus the free-blowing, 16-minute closer "Barche Lamsel," named after a Buddhist prayer. Yet the focus tilts toward traditional tunes like "Shenandoah" and folk/pop standards. "There are many haunting, simple melodies that speak to me," he says. "When you love music, you love a lot of it."

A native of Memphis with equally broad ancestry (African, Cherokee, Irish and Mongolian), Lloyd grew up under the spell of sax icons Lester Young and Charlie Parker. Yet as a teenager, he served as a sideman with blues greats Howlin' Wolf and B.B. King before moving to LA to earn a classical music degree, studying with a Bartok expert, and ended up jamming in the clubs with Ornette Coleman. Lloyd also made an early entry into world music, collaborating with Nigerian drummer Babatunde Olatunji between gigs with Chico Hamilton and Cannonball Adderley.

But Lloyd found initial fame with his original quartet, which featured pianist Keith Jarrett and drummer Jack DeJohnette before Miles Davis swiped them for his own band. The Charles Lloyd Quartet recorded one of jazz's first million-sellers in 1966's Forest Flower: Live at Monterey and opened for rockers like Jimi Hendrix, Janis Joplin and the Grateful Dead at San Francisco's Fillmore Auditorium.

"They wanted to be on concert bills with us and learn how to stretch out and improvise," says Lloyd, who went on to record and tour with the Beach Boys during a break from jazz in the '70s. "Barriers were down, ideals were high."

He's continued to blaze his own trail since returning to jazz in the '80s, and his recent output remains ever vital. "I continue to look for the note reflected on the water," Lloyd says. "When I have found it, I will lay down and return to the forest." ◆

COLD SWEAT

HERE ARE SOME COOL IDEAS FOR SOAKING UP THE SUB-ZERO WEATHER.

BRRR. FEEL THE CHILL? WINTER IS ON its way. But don't worry: There are tons of fun ways to enjoy the season and have a blast despite the sun being a cold dead orb that barely seems to struggle above the horizon before the wizened claw of frigid darkness once again tightens its bony grip upon the land. So don't just huddle inside drinking cold Ruski vodka and eating your vitamin D pills—get out there and have a great time with these outdoor ideas that'll turn your life into a winter*fun*-derland!

Snowshoeing. Snowshoeing is magical. Instead of laboriously slogging through deep powder, punching down and dragging your boots back to the surface with each punishing step, snowshoes allow you to glide gracefully across the surface. Oh, I'm sorry—those are cross-country skis. Snowshoes are giant baskets you strap to your feet, and wearing them is considered a sign of hypothermia-induced mental impairment. Snowshoeing is like trying to use an elliptical machine with both feet jammed into trash cans, or dancing a mambo in Satan's clogs. It's said that the Inuit have 100 words for snow and not one word for why anyone would wear snowshoes.

Sledding. In fifth grade, there was an eighth-grader who was kicking the little kids down the sledding hill before they could reach the top. So, as I climbed up near his boots, I reached out and wrapped him up, toppling him all the way down the hill and filling the pockets of his Jordaches with snow. He responded by giving me a wedgie hard enough to rip my underwear. So you've got to be really careful when you're sledding.

Skiing. Oftentimes the temperature in Boston will sink into the teens or lower. You know what that means: time to go north and seek higher elevation. When you get to the mountain, you'll park in Lot 15, which is that many miles from the base lodge. Then you'll carry your $2,000 worth of gear to the lodge, where everyone removes their normal shoes and hides them under a cafeteria table. You put on your ski boots, which require you to walk like you have a loaded diaper, then realize that you have to go to the bathroom, which is down six flights of stairs. By the time you clomp there and back, it's lunchtime. After lunch, you decide to head to the summit, which is easily accessible from the base lodge. All you do is take the T-bar to the top of Silly Goose, then ski down to the Rabid Moose quad and take it back up to Head Wound Gully. You ski that down to the Chairway to Hell low-speed triple, and then from there it's back down Certain Dismemberment, where you traverse over to the gondola. There, a guy named Xander who's just taking a year off to figure things out will herd you and five strangers into a small box, where you'll spend the next 10 minutes avoiding eye contact and praying nobody farts. When the gondola doors reopen, you'll find yourself watching the sunset from the majesty of the mid-mountain lodge. So you ski back down to the base lodge, which takes 30 seconds, and get into some après-ski, which involves frostbitten people with reconstructed knees getting drunk to Dave Matthews Band covers while wearing winter hats indoors. It might all sound like a lot, but you can learn to be a competent skier even if you start at an advanced age, by which I mean no later than 6.

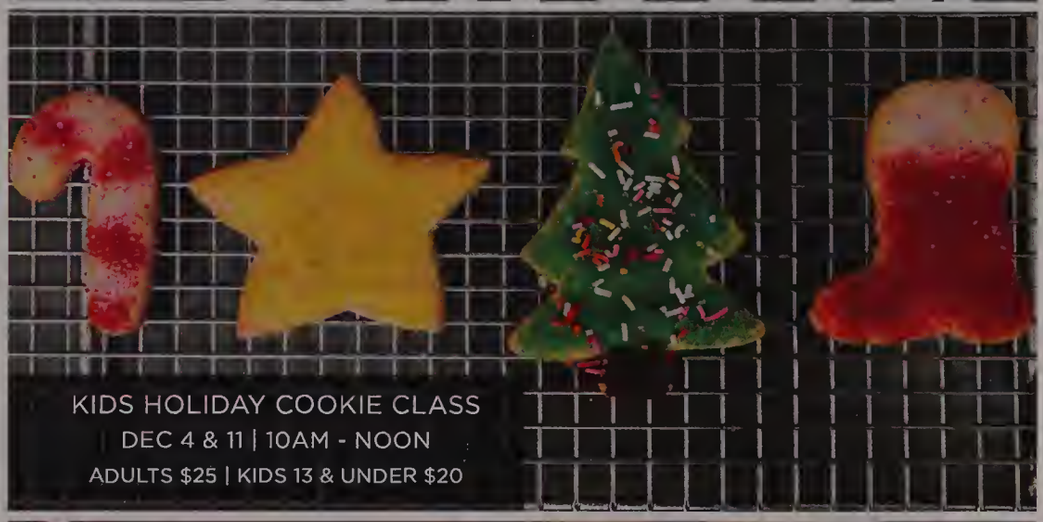
Snowshoeing is like trying to use an elliptical machine with both feet jammed into trash cans, or dancing a mambo in Satan's clogs.



Ice skating. Winter just isn't winter without a deep bone bruise, so why not go for the coccyx?

Ice fishing. Ice fishing is when you cut a hole in the ice and then build a six-bedroom house around it, complete with NFL Sunday Ticket in the game room and a two-car garage. One night, during a dinner party, the caterer offers a heavy passed hors d'oeuvre—some kind of beef with chevre thing, really good—and your friend Jeff takes a step back and puts his foot right down through the fishing hole, which is next to the half-bath off the kitchen, and you're like, "Hey Jeff, careful buddy! We're fishing." Then the next week the ice melts and everyone is rescued by hovercraft.

Building a snowman. Building a snowman is a playful way to tell Mother Nature that a little bit of sticky precipitation won't stop you from fashioning pagan idols. Traditional snowmen have lumps of coal for their eyes and mouth, but you should celebrate carbon-neutral energy by using chunks of uranium. The fun thing about making a snowman is that the rolling snowballs pick up anything that was on the ground, making for all sorts of neat surprises. Say, did you clean up after your dog before it snowed, or does Mr. Shivers have a funny-looking pipe in his mouth? No and yes! Don't worry too much about getting him perfect, because he's just going to melt. Probably no later than St. Patrick's Day. ◆

HOLIDAY HIJACK

SOUND ADVICE ON HAM-FISTED HOSTS, SLOPPY STYLE AND WRITERLY WOES

JOHN D. SPOONER IS AN INVESTMENT ADVISER, author and novelist. His most recent book is No One Ever Told Us That: Money and Life Lessons for Young Adults. Here, he responds to queries from advice seekers of all ages. Send your conundrums to thedance@improper.com.

Last year I planned a great little Christmas at home. I shopped, found the right recipes and was looking forward to a special meal. We were invited to my sister-in-law's house on Christmas, supposedly for a cocktail and apps and to be with family so the kids could open their prezzies. We were to arrive around noon and hopefully be home by 3 pm, planning to eat our dinner around 5 pm. We arrived, had a fun visit and were just getting ready to leave when my sister-in-law appeared from the kitchen with a huge tray in her hands: a ham. Total huge dinner. Long story short, we stayed, had dinner and went home to a fridge full of food that had to wait. How can we not get sabotaged again? Gee, unless you hate your sister-in-law, I'd view this as a total victory. You get to have dinner with other people cooking, serving and cleaning up. There are a few holidays where it's especially comforting to be around other people and not alone. Thanksgiving and Christmas and New Year's Eve are the prime examples of that. After Christmas dinner out, you can enjoy your own food at home as well as the real treat of all holiday dinners... leftovers.

I'm not a retro woman or anything, but we're in a sloppy universe, particularly the guys. The guys dress like they just rolled out of bed. They wear bowling shirts at the theater; they wear Julian Edelman jerseys at Symphony Hall. What's next, Big Papi T-shirts to get married in? Why do I think we're out of control in our behavior and our dress? Am I nuts? Well, I don't have enough information to tell if you're nuts or not. But your rant is totally legitimate. I recently saw Hamilton, a work of brilliance. But at intermission, I stood up and checked the audience, including the upper balconies and the boxes. I was the only man in the theater in a suit and tie. Lowering of standards? Absolutely. But I think I know how to turn it to your advantage.

Years ago, I had a friend who was slightly deranged in good ways. He never played sports in high school; he rode horses. No one in my high school rode horses. There were rumors that he slept with his eyes open. The boys called him "Freaky Frank," but he was way ahead of his time in the clothes department. My odd friend, in those dress-up days, wore jeans and plaid flannel shirts and tennis sneakers to travel in planes. In the 1960s, flying was a dress-up adventure. Women wore suits and dresses and heels. And hats. Men wore suits and ties. (And until JFK emerged...hats.) Flying was a special event. In the 1970s, flying to Los Angeles, a prime roast would be wheeled to your seat and individually carved for you (admittedly, in first class). Freaky Frank was the first person I knew who would wear ripped khakis and T-shirts to fly. He didn't care what other people thought. Today, it would be called "branding."

You sound like you're a woman with taste and style, and today that means you'll stand out in a crowd. And if any guy wants to win your affection, he'd better be a little different to get your attention. Maybe even wear a bow tie.

I want to write novels when I get out of graduate school, but I'm reading a lot about what seems like a kind of censorship today. If you write fiction, you're making up your own world, your own characters, and anything goes. You can write fairytales, or Westerns, or sci-fi, or love stories. But there seem to be critics all over the place who say, "If you're a man, you cannot write about women. If you're Caucasian, you cannot imagine the Asian experience. You can't write about the Irish if you're not Irish..." Is the world going totally mad, with the thought police from Orwell finding outrage under every rock? What kind of writing future can I have? Well, my first advice to you is, if you want to be a novelist, get a teaching job so you'll have a base salary and health care. Or, like most writers with a dream, you can wait tables or drive for Uber. It's not going to be easy, and the world of fiction is particularly hard. A majority of the book buyers today are women, so it may be tough to crack fiction or "novels of manners" if you're a man. Not true if you write nonfiction, sci-fi or mysteries.

I remember years ago when William Styron, who was about as liberal and politically caring as a person could be, wrote the novel The Confessions of Nat Turner. It was a white man writing about black history and imagining what it was to be a slave. He was bitter and hurt by the criticism and the reviews. He also won a Pulitzer for it. Your job as a novelist is to write what you want to write, to let it flow, to grip it and rip it. If you think about what certain witch hunters think about what you write, then you're not a writer. ◆

Soroff On / Keesha Sharp

LOOKING SHARP

THE ACTRESS CHATS ABOUT LOSING A GIG TO KERRY WASHINGTON, DYING ON CAMERA AND EGOT DREAMS.

ACTRESS, SINGER, WRITER AND DIRECTOR KEESHA Sharp, 43, was born and raised in Rochester, New York, where she studied clarinet, piano and cello at the Hochstein School of Music. She graduated cum laude from the Boston Conservatory and quickly landed theatrical roles in shows such as Aida, The Producers and Joe Turner's Come and Gone, in which she read alongside playwright August Wilson. On television, she recently played Dale Cochran in The People v. O.J. Simpson, and she currently plays Trish Murtaugh on the Fox series Lethal Weapon. Her other television credits include Are We There Yet? and Girlfriends. On the big screen, she has appeared in Why Did I Get Married? and The 636, and she plays Thurgood Marshall's wife Vivian "Buster" Burey in the forthcoming film Marshall. She is also working on a full-length album. She lives in Los Angeles with her husband, Brad, and their son.

JONATHAN SOROFF: So do you still play clarinet, piano and cello?
KEESHA SHARP: I do. The cello's not so good anymore, because if you're not practicing, your fingers get all exhausted, and you don't have your calluses. But I still play. I love it.

Favorite thing about your time in Boston? Oh, my goodness, I have so many. Meeting some of my best friends, most of whom I still have today, performing on stage with such talented people. The truth is that when you get into professional theater—and I'm not talking about every show, obviously—you have some people who you're like, "How'd they get in the show?" But at the conservatory, every single person was so talented. We did so many shows—Nine, Peer Gynt, Assassins—and they were phenomenal. Just being around such like-minded, gifted people was incredible.

Favorite Broadway musical of all time? Of all time? I love Once on This Island. I know it's really simple, but I just love it. The story is about love, and it's a class story, where the poor girl falls in love with the rich boy, and also in terms of color, because it takes place on an island. The lighter skinned you are, you're presumed to be better, and that's in there. That show just has a special place in my heart.

Were you always a Broadway baby? I was. I was that odd little chick. My brother and sister were into rap and hip-hop and R&B, and I was listening to Barbra Streisand. I was obsessed with her. Back in those days, we had a little tape recorder, and I would tape Yentl—which was one of my favorite movies growing up—off the TV. Then I'd go back to my room and sing to it. I always felt at home on the stage, and I miss it a lot.

Actor you most want to work with? I'm obsessed with Daniel Day-Lewis. It's impossible to put into words. As an actress, I'm crazy method myself. I don't go too far. I don't have to experiment with drugs to portray someone on them. But a lot of people think I'm crazy with the things I do to prepare, and I feel like Daniel Day-Lewis would understand. I think he'd be heaven to work with.

Role you wanted but didn't get? I'm an actor! There are a million. But I'll give you two. One was Django Unchained, and it was Broomhilda, the character Kerry Washington played. That was big for me, because I really thought I was going to get it. The other one I didn't get was Lethal Weapon, at first. I really love the franchise, and I love those movies. I auditioned and didn't get it, then got a phone call a month later saying that I'd booked it. You just never know.

"I was that odd little chick. My brother and sister were into rap and hip-hop and R&B, and I was listening to Barbra Streisand."

Role you're dying to play? I really want to play Eartha Kitt. She's so amazing. I want to tell her story. I've been working on it for years. First, Janet Jackson had the rights, then Beyoncé's company had the rights, but we're delving back into it. That's my dream role. I really want that to happen.

Singing, acting, writing—which is the most gratifying? Acting. I love the others, and it's hard to choose, but there's something about taking on a character that isn't satisfied by playing music. You can get it by doing musical theater, but that's because it includes acting. There's nothing like losing yourself in someone else.

Biggest audition nightmare? I won't name the casting director, but I'll never forget the time I was auditioning for a really heavy role. The character had been beaten and now she was being stalked. In the scene, she's being interrogated by the police, and it's this very fraught situation. The casting director's phone rings in the middle of the audition, and he actually answered it and had a conversation. The producers were so embarrassed. I was so mad. I swore I'd never audition for that casting director again, ever...and of course, I was cast by him a few months ago. [Laughs.]

How are you most like your character Trish Murtaugh? The only difference between us is that she's a lawyer and I'm not. Oh, and she has three kids, but I only have one. Otherwise, we're pretty similar. It's the first role for me that is like myself. I support my husband in whatever he wants to do. I'm there for my child. Same with Robert and Trish. They're a really solid couple, pursuing their dreams and wanting to make a difference in the world.

Was making Why Did I Get Married? just hilarious? Yes, because of Tyler Perry. But it was also a real lesson for me, because he did everything. He wrote. He directed. He acted. It was a lesson in being able to do it all, and eventually, I might like to do that. So that was a schooling in doing that, and doing it well.

OK, so Leprechaun: Back 2 tha Hood. Was that unfairly overlooked by the Academy? [Laughs.] You are so wrong. You are throwing shade! [Laughs.] No, it was not overlooked. But let me tell you. The reason I took it is that there's a superstition in Hollywood that when you die in a film, it's good luck. So when I read the script and saw that I died—very tragically, I might add—I decided to do it. It was fun and campy, and it had a little cult following. There are people who love it.

What do you consider your best feature? I love my smile. And I think smiling is contagious. It lights me up, and then you pass it on.

Which would you rather have: an Oscar, an Emmy, a Tony or a Grammy? An Oscar. Followed by all the other ones. I want every single one. ◆

Big Ten

The ICA throws a marathon party.

TIN IS TRADITIONAL for 10th anniversary gifts, but the Institute of Contemporary Art is celebrating its decadelong residence on the waterfront with steel—the Branches Steel Orchestra, that is. The Dorchester band will bring calypso tunes to the museum's free community day on Dec. 10, which also features dance performances, artmaking projects, pop-up talks, giveaways and free coffee to keep you fueled for the fun. And there are more celebrations in store: The community day is the culmination of ICA 10, a 10-day lineup that includes an Island Creek Oyster shucking demo, a movement installation by choreographer Heidi Latsky, a trunk show for local makers, a throwback dance party and other festivities, which kick off Dec. 1. / Jacqueline Houton

ICA 10 runs Dec. 1–10 at the Institute of Contemporary Art, 25 Harbor Shore Drive, Boston. Prices vary; many events are free. icaboston.org/ica-10

HAPPY HOLIDAZE

The classic Christmas lyric "10 lords a leaping" takes on a whole new meaning in Cirque Dreams Holidaze, in which life-size holiday characters like gingerbread men and toy soldiers indeed leap... and flip and tumble and soar. Now in its eighth year and under the direction of Neil Goldberg, who has staged productions for the Super Bowl, Holidaze brings the holidays to life on a stage filled with huge presents and 30-foot Christmas trees. Incorporating more than 300 costumes into 20 acts, the show celebrates the most wonderful time of the year with a combination of acrobatic and aerial feats, live music, dance and variety acts. Be sure to swing by when it lands at the Boch Shubert Theatre on Dec. 9-11. / Arden Stringer

ABOUT A BOY Starting puberty is tough on any tween, but for the boys in 2015's Evolution, it's downright creepy. French director Lucile Hadzihalilovic, previously known for her girls boarding school-set film Innocence, this time focuses on an island inhabited only by young boys and their older female caretakers, who routinely hospitalize the kids in mysterious medical facilities. But the entirety of the program and way of life is threatened when 10-year-old Nicolas finds a corpse off shore and enlists his friends to investigate what really goes on behind closed doors. Experience the growing pains firsthand when the film makes its area premiere at the Brattle Theatre on Dec. 2-8. / Meghan Kavanaugh

Arrival ★★1/2 When I first heard the strong word-of-mouth buzz about this science-fiction film from Denis Villeneuve (director of Prisoners, Sicario and the forthcoming Blade Runner sequel), I should have paid heed to the name of the picture's screenwriter: Eric Heisserer, the scribe behind Final Destination 5 and the misbegotten reboots of A Nightmare on Elm Street and The Thing. Though Heisserer is working with someone else's tale (Ted Chiang's Nebula Award-winning short story "Story of Your Life"), the thought-provoking ideas in his script begin to collapse the more you think about them. Nevertheless, while the spell lasts, Villeneuve (aided immeasurably by his longtime collaborator, composer Jóhann Jóhannsson) presents a compelling drama as linguistics expert Louise Banks (Amy Adams) and theoretical physicist Ian Donnelly (Jeremy Renner) race to communicate with the mysterious alien lifeforms aboard massive UFOs that suddenly appear around the planet. Also hindered by visuals that are too ambitious for its modest budget, the film is a noble, flawed effort. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Fenway, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Bleed for This ★★★ Fans of sports films were blessed with one of the best boxing movies of recent years with last Thanksgiving's Creed, the improbably rousing seventh installment in Sylvester Stallone's Rocky franchise that began four decades ago. After that success, it's not surprising that the inspirational boxing drama genre has been revived not once, but twice this year. The uneven Hands of Stone enlisted the Raging Bull himself, Robert De Niro, casting him as legendary trainer Ray Arcel opposite equally legendary fighter Roberto Durán (Edgar Ramírez). Now, the Panamanian boxer (here played by Edwin Rodriguez) turns up again during a title fight in the better contender, Bleed for This, which has been punched up with workmanlike grit by filmmaker Ben Younger. While it's not in the same weight class as the Rocky series' rebirth, this Rhode Island-shot picture is nevertheless a stirring look at the implausible-yet-true comeback of Vinny Pazienza (Miles Teller), who fought back from a car wreck that broke his neck in 1991. "The Pazmanian Devil" should never have walked again, never mind boxed, but Teller sells Pazienza's struggle, portraying the pugilist with as much masochistic drive as the embattled drummer he played so memorably in 2014's Whiplash. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Doctor Strange ★★★ If you enjoyed the trippy Quantum Realm in the climax of 2015's Ant-Man, you ain't seen nothing yet: Director Scott Derrickson and his army of talented visual effects artists have conjured a mind-bending multiverse for this origin story. It follows world-famous neurosurgeon Stephen Strange (Benedict Cumberbatch), whose hands have become shakier than the British Cumberbatch's American patois after a horrific car accident. Having exhausted every medical option in his attempts to heal, Strange travels to an arcane enclave hidden within Kathmandu, where martial-arts practitioner Baron Mordo (Chiwetel Ejiofor) saves the good doctor from further injury at the hands of thugs before introducing him to the Ancient One (Oscar winner Tilda Swinton), the bald-headed leader of a clan of magic-wielding monks who teaches our hero the art of sorcery. While Marvel's latest film may seem like a retread of Iron Man's original adventure—especially once Strange adopts a goatee to go along with his massive ego and self-deprecating jokes—the dazzling visuals help make up for a familiar story. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Edge of Seventeen ★★★1/2 I wouldn't have guessed that this delicate comic drama marks the directorial debut of its writer/director, Kelly Fremon Craig, who has only one previous writing credit to her name (Post Grad, a 2009 comedy starring Michael Keaton and Alexis Bledel), but the guiding hand of producer James L. Brooks—the Academy Award winner behind classics such as Terms of Endearment, Broadcast News and As Good as It Gets—is visible in nearly every frame. Craig's character-driven charmer focuses on gawky high school junior Nadine (Hailee Steinfeld in a rich, heartbreaking performance), whose life is disrupted when her lone friend, Krista (Haley Lu Richardson), begins dating her "perfect" all-star older brother Darian (Blake Jenner). With her beloved father (Eric Keenleyside) dead and her relationship with her mother (Kyra Sedgwick) fractured, Nadine turns to her dry-witted history teacher (MVP Woody Harrelson), who becomes her sounding board and mentor, advising her though some of the awkward episodes that earned the film its R rating. See it with your daughter—if she's not too embarrassed to go with you. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Fantastic Beasts and Where to Find Them ★★1/2 Director David Yates, who helmed the final four Harry Potter adaptations, returns to the "Wizarding World" of author J.K. Rowling for this spinoff. And once you hear the first few notes borrowed from composer John Williams' Potter theme play under the title card, there's no denying we're back in familiar territory—even if this new tale is set during an earlier era, on the opposite side of the Atlantic and starring a British hero only hinted at in an earlier picture. It's 1926 in New York, and Newt Scamander (Oscar winner Eddie Redmayne) is fresh off a boat, carrying a rather special portmanteau that doubles as a portal to the makeshift zoo he maintains for his menagerie of fantastic beasts. Naturally, some get loose, unleashing enough visual effects overkill to fill four sequels. Conveniently enough, a quartet of follow-ups have already been announced, all of which will be scripted by Rowling, who makes a shaky screenwriting debut in this film. Now that her world-building is done, let's hope she allows her characters—including wand-wielding sisters Porpentina (Katherine Waterston) and Queenie Goldstein (Alison Sudol) and Jacob Kowalski (Dan Fogler), the No-Maj (American for Muggle) who gets swept up in the adventure—more room to create beautiful magic together. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Girl on the Train ★★ The basic plot of this mystery/thriller isn't so bad; it's likely a reason the Paula Hawkins novel it's based on has spent so long on the bestseller lists. However, Erin Cressida Wilson's adapted screenplay does a poor job of laying out a cohesive framework. Needlessly convoluted with confusing time jumps, the film also suffers from less-than-Hitchcockian direction by Tate Taylor, who was more at ease behind the camera of 2011's The Help and definitely more adept at handling the passage of time in 2014's James Brown biopic, Get on Up. Here, Taylor relies far too much on unflattering close-ups and unnecessary slow motion, both of which distract from the lurid tale that could have benefitted from a different touch. Strangely, the action has been transplanted from the book's U.K. setting to upstate New York, even though British actress Emily Blunt has been cast as Rachel, the recently divorced, boozy protagonist and unreliable narrator of one-third of our tale. She's easily the best thing in the film, which centers on a missing person case while weaving in infidelity, childbearing and possibly murder. If only the thrills matched the mystery. (At Assembly Row, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Hacksaw Ridge ★★★ This is the first movie Mel Gibson has directed since 2006's Apocalypto, after Hollywood turned its back on him and his anti-Semitic ravings. Ah, but Hollywood loves a good redemption story, and Gibson is also the man who made 2004's The Passion of the Christ. Like that film, Hacksaw Ridge is both deeply religious and grotesquely violent. But then, it would be wrong to gloss over the horrors of World War II's Battle of Okinawa, which occupies the second half of Mad Mel's return to directing. But before he places us on the bloody battlefield, Gibson fills in the backstory of Desmond Doss, a Seventh-day Adventist hailing from the Blue Ridge Mountains in Virginia. As played by Andrew Garfield, Doss is a skinny kid who spends his days in church when he's not standing up to his shellshocked drunk of a dad (Hugo Weaving) or pursuing his future bride Dorothy (Teresa Palmer). These scenes are as corny as our hero is cornfed, and their conventionality extends to the scenes of basic training. But Gibson's picture hits its stride once we get to the meat of the story, when Desmond—a conscientious objector who refuses to even touch a gun—nevertheless saves the lives of some 75 men. The religious imagery that closes this true tale may be a bit much, but then, no one's ever accused Gibson of understatement. (At Assembly Row, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Handmaiden ★★★1/2 "Inspired by" Sarah Waters' 2002 novel Fingersmith, which was set in Victorian England, this is very much the product of Park Chan-wook, the operatic director of 2003's Oldboy. Relocating the tale to his home of South Korea (after working in America for his first English-language film, 2013's disappointing Stoker), Park presents his latest genre hybrid—a romantic crime drama—in both Korean (subtitled in white) and Japanese (subtitled in yellow) as we follow the titular handmaiden, Sook-hee (Kim Tae-ri). As we soon discover, she's the daughter of a master thief who's following in her late mother's footsteps. Her latest scheme involves persuading her employer, Japanese heiress Lady Hideko (Kim Min-hee), to marry Sook-hee's co-conspirator (Ha Jung-woo), who's posing as a count. Alas, things get complicated—and a whole lot steamier—when Hideko takes a much larger interest in her new maid. The bold eroticism on display is just as fun as the eventual (and literal) gallows humor that works its way into the third act; this is a Park Chan-wook picture, after all! As such, there are also numerous plot twists that should please fans of the filmmaker, who masterfully controls every reversal and sumptuously framed shot, aided immeasurably by his longtime collaborators, cinematographer Chung Chung-hoon and composer Jo Yeong-wook. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Loving ★★★ After venturing into science fiction with this spring's uneven Midnight Special, writer/director Jeff Nichols reunites a number of players from that film's cast for an earth-bound drama more in line with his previous character studies, 2007's Shotgun Stories, 2011's Take Shelter and 2012's Mud. Arkansas native Nichols knows the South—and its deeply-rooted racist past—which serves him well as he dramatizes the courage and commitment of Richard and Mildred Loving (Joel Edgerton and Ruth Negga), an interracial couple who fought a nearly decadelong battle for the right to live with their children as a family in their home state of Virginia. Their civil-rights case went all the way to the Supreme Court, bringing to an end anti-miscegenation laws in 1967, reaffirming not only the Lovings' right to marry, but solidifying the foundation of marriage for all who followed in their footsteps. Eschewing manufactured drama, Nichols celebrates the quiet dignity of his subjects. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Moana ★★★1/2 With Pixar boss John Lasseter now overseeing production for the classic Disney Animation label, some may mourn the death of the hand-drawn animation seen in the likes of The Little Mermaid and Aladdin as traditional animation directors make the switch from ink and paint to CG. Nevertheless, the filmmaking team behind those classics, Ron Clements and John Musker, are off to a sterling start with this action-packed fable, which is co-directed by Don Hall and Chris Williams, the duo behind Big Hero 6. This tale of an adventurous teenager hits huge emotional highs, backed by toe-tapping songs from Lin-Manuel Miranda (the musical genius behind Broadway's Hamilton), Grammy-winning composer Mark Mancina and Opetaia Foa'i, lead singer of world music band Te Vaka. It has Moana (voiced by 16-year-old newcomer Auli'i Cravalho) sailing off on a heroic mission to save her people with some help from once-mighty demigod Maui (Dwayne Johnson). While the story may be familiar, in a refreshing break from the norm, Disney's newest princess sets sail without the prospect of a prince awaiting her on the horizon. Ah, progress. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Moonlight ★★★★ Writer/director Barry Jenkins' sophomore film is a powerfully acted drama spread across three distinct acts, all focused on the same character, seen first as a child (Alex R. Hibbert), then as a teen (Ashton Sanders) and at last as an adult (Trevante Rhodes). Each chapter would stand as a strong short film if viewed independently, but the cumulative effect might just blindside you. Jenkins introduces us to Little (Hibbert) when he's a poor black youth living in a Miami housing project. Gradually, a local drug dealer named Juan (Mahershala Ali) and his girlfriend Teresa (R&B singer Janelle Monáe) become surrogate parents to Little. This doesn't sit well with Paula (Naomie Harris), Little's single mother, an addict who's hooked on the junk that Juan peddles. Sadly, she can't help taking out the resentment she feels toward Juan and Teresa on her quiet, "different" child. Exactly how different, we discover when Little breaks his usual silence to ask Juan, "What's a faggot?" Calmly and without judgment, Juan explains, "It's a word people use to make gay people feel bad." The boy then inquires, "Am I a faggot?" Juan warmly replies, "You might be gay, but you're not a faggot.... You gotta decide for yourself who you wanna be." By the final third, as our no-longer-little hero drives toward an oceanside date with fate, he not only embraces who he is, but the boy finally becomes a man. Bring tissues. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Queen of Katwe ★★★ After their modest success with 2014's Million Dollar Arm, Disney is back with another inspirational sports drama set in a foreign land. And although both are based on true stories, this tale of a young girl from rural Uganda who pursues her dream of becoming a chess champion doesn't rely on the trope of a white American who makes it possible, as John Hamm's character did in the former film when he traveled to India to tap cricket players who might excel at playing baseball. Instead, director Mira Nair (Monsoon Wedding) allows her film to be an East African story through and through, utilizing the native tongues of English and Swahili. As soccer player-turned-missionary Robert Katende (Selma's David Oyelowo) begins teaching strategic thinking and risk-taking to underprivileged youths through the game of chess, he recognizes the potential in 10-year-old Phiona Mutesi (luminous newcomer Madina Nalwanga), encouraging her to compete on a higher level. Alas, Phiona's mother (Lupita Nyong'o, an Oscar winner for 12 Years a Slave) would rather her daughter be more practical and sell corn to help keep a roof over their heads. OK, so William Wheeler's script (based on the book by Tim Crothers) isn't exactly breaking much new ground, but the winning performances greatly elevate this familiar story. (At West Newton and in the suburbs.)

MUSIC

Edited by Alexandra Cavallo

SMOKE SHOW The Chainsmokers have pulled off the nearly impossible: parlaying a song that seemed at best a catchy one-hit wonder and at worst mere fodder for a viral Vine meme into international megastardom. The DJ duo hit the internet with 2014's "#Selfie"—the YouTube vid has amassed nearly 500 million views—and instead of fading into obscurity, they turned their brand of bro-EDM into a commodity that has launched them to the top of the Billboard charts and the bills of huge tours. Club-dominating singles like "Closer" are marked by infectious hooks and singalong choruses that you'll succumb to whether you like it or not, so get addicted when the Chainsmokers play the House of Blues on Dec. 5. / Alexandra Cavallo

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Sarah Hagman

DUCK TALES The Museum of Fine Arts' latest retrospective is one for the books. Celebrating the 75th anniversary of author and illustrator Robert McCloskey's beloved children's story, Make Way for Ducklings draws from preliminary sketches, which had the Ohio native studying specimens at the American Museum of Natural History, consulting an ornithologist and even taking in 16 waddling roommates to serve as models in his Greenwich Village apartment. Visitors will also find bronze maquettes for Nancy Schön's Public Garden sculpture, plus some 50 works on paper from seven other books, including sketches of McCloskey's daughter and plants at the New York Botanical Garden, which came to fruition in his 1948 classic Blueberries for Sal. Make your way to the Edward and Nancy Roberts Family Gallery, where the exhibit is on display through June 18. / Sarah Hagman

DOGGY BAG PLEASE

Being in the doghouse took on a whole new meaning at Raise the Woof, a gala for the MSPCA, held at the Boston Center for the Arts' Cyclorama.

All the hottest bitches were there, with their owners in tow, among them studly architect David Hacin and his handsome other half, Tim Grafft, and their schnauzer, Walter, auburn-haired humanitarian Sherry Sturino and her adoring husband, Otello, Chestnut Hillion Gale Minot and the adorable Cody, uber philanthropists Lori and Matthew Sidman with their non-human offspring, sizzling blonde Dianna Reza, the always radiant Julie Hume Gordon, political firecracker Deb Goldberg with silver fox Michael Winter, latter-day Brenda Vaccaro Wendy Goldstein Pierce, power couple Stephanie and Greg Loeber and her parents, the Schonmetzlers, luxury car pusher Kevin Bugbee, blue-blooded restaurateur George Lewis and the captivating Claudine, the drop-dead-gorgeous Jessica Nigrelli and the debonair Andrew, and so on and so forth.

The cocktail setup was a bit of a cockup, especially when dogs and leashes were added to the equation. But once guests followed the paw prints stenciled on the floor through a giant cutout of a doghouse and into the dining room, there was the cleverest ploy to get everyone to sit down: a continuous loop of people in a dog park, admonishing their pets to "Sit!"

The evening's funniest comment, to a man who was there without his husband: "Oh, he let you off the leash for the evening?"

EVERYTHING IS BEAUTIFUL AT THE BALLET

Having Johnny Depp appear in full Captain Jack Sparrow regalia is about the only thing that could have improved upon Opening Night of Boston Ballet's new season.

The premiere of Le Corsaire began with a cocktail reception at the Opera House, followed by the performance, which was grog to anyone who fetishizes pirates (like me). Seen walking the plank: Pakistani princess Sophia Ali, the intimidatingly gorgeous Andrea and John Osbon, the perfectly coiffed Linda Shapiro Waintrup and her affable other half, Dan, dashing do-gooder Freddie Martignetti, Sister of Perpetual Naughtiness Mary English, power couple Steve Weiner and Don Cornuet, the ever-elegant Ruth Littlechild and her debonair husband, John, Midwestern beauty Diane Schmalensee, banking bigwig Alison Quirk, gorgeous Iranian painter Susie Gheyssari, the ethereal Susan Richardson, petite pixie Lisa Blumenthal with her bespectacled hipster, Tom, and one woman who described the performance as a "Rudolph Valentino movie meets ballet."

After the performance, there was dinner and dancing at the Ritz-Carlton, where one guest marveled at the fact that dancers who had just been on stage for two hours still wanted to get down.

The evening's most honest remark: "Excuse me, but there's a really rich guy I gotta go talk to."

BETTER THAN NETFLIX AND CHILL

Dinner and a movie got a major upgrade at the Joey O'Donnell Film Premiere, a fundraiser for The Joey Fund, which seeks a cure for cystic fibrosis.

The evening began with cocktails and food stations from Boston's top restaurants in the atrium of the Natick Mall, and the night continued at the AMC Theatre in Framingham with a sneak peek at the sure-to-be-Oscar-contender La La Land. Present and accounted for: the charity's founders, Joe and Kathy O'Donnell, the incomparably gorgeous Nina Fialkow and her dashing husband, David, king of the hospitality jungle Patrick Lyons and the flawless Kristina, undercover Bond Girl Katherine Chapman Stemberg, investor/scribe/bon vivant John Spooner, beguiling brunette Jan Saragoni, blond bombshell Corinne Grousbeck, real estate titan Steve Karp and the comme il faut Jill, and so on and so forth.

The consensus seemed to be that the movie was an instant classic, and everyone went home with a gift bag that included three of the most useful things in the world: Twizzlers, M&M's and an umbrella.

The evening's funniest line: "I don't usually wear Louboutins to the movies." ◆

TREAT YO'SELF

LOBSTERS WERE ONCE SERVED to prisoners in New England penitentiaries, and the groundlings who couldn't afford a proper theater seat during Shakespeare's day nonetheless noshed on oysters, the popcorn of the era. Suffice it to say, luxury can be a slippery concept, as several stories in this issue suggest. While working on a piece on caviar offerings popping up around town, I learned that saloons once doled out free fish eggs the same way bars serve up salted nuts today. Meghan Kavanaugh's feature, meanwhile, taps tales from the chef's table, noting that many of Boston's most extravagant meals are happening behind-the-scenes, near the heat and noise of the kitchen. And Lydia Santangelo's fashion spread shows that Styrofoam, insulation and pegboards can look decidedly luxe when serving as a backdrop for modern pearl accessories. Speaking of bling, Sarah Hagman chats with a local mineral maven about his collection of jaw-dropping gems. Elsewhere, Ezra Dyer rounds up the top 10 vehicles he'd purchase should he ever win the Powerball. And Jonathan Soroff chats with our talented cover subject, Saugus-bred actress Tracee Chimo, who's currently playing a Victorian pickpocket who gets her own glimpse of the good life when she sets out to scam an heiress (intrigue ensues). Happy reading.

Imperatives

CAVIAR IS POPPING UP ON PLATES ALL OVER TOWN.

EASY BEING GREEN: "Plankton is one of our favorite ingredients here," chef Michael Scelfo says of a key element in the blini served with caviar at Waypoint.

A Cavalcade of Caviar

Caviar was once so plentiful in America that bars gave the stuff away to stoke patrons' thirst, until overfishing brought sturgeon to the brink of extinction and returned its roe to luxury status. But thanks in part to advances in aquaculture, the favorite delicacy of czars and shahs is popping up on new menus around town—and shedding some of its stuffy rep.

"People have a perception that caviar is unapproachable and expensive, so they don't try it," says Saltie Girl executive chef Kyle McClelland, who previously honed his roe know-how at New York's Caviar Russe. "That's one of the reasons we offer caviar by the quarter- and half-ounce. We want to give guests an entry point and make it part of the regular dining experience." Diners at the Back Bay boite can add a dollop to any dish, order a traditional one-ounce Russian caviar service or try it in plates like the Eggs & Eggs (where it's paired with free-range scrambled eggs) and the Caviar Dip & Chips (where it tops Kendall Farms' crème fraîche mixed with chives, scallions, shallots, lemon juice and seasoned rice wine vinegar).

Meanwhile, at Waypoint in Cambridge, chef/owner Michael Scelfo's caviar service comes with buttermilk crema, croissant donut holes and blini made with plankton and heirloom white corn from Anson Mills. "It's a nice balance of new-school technique and old-school ideas," says Scelfo, who likes to wash caviar down with absinthe. (Beverage director Seth Freidus has also prepared a lineup of "Top Roe Spirits," like Cold River vodka infused with capers and pickled roe.)

Of course, when it comes to pairing, you can't go wrong with a glass of Champagne. "We offer the Pol Roger Réserve, which works great with the salty treat," suggests Justin Shoults, executive chef at Fort Point's Oak + Rowan, where you can order caviar (pictured on pg. 9) as a single tasting, a half-ounce serving on a Portuguese "English muffin" or a flight of four varieties: wild-caught hackleback from Illinois, Snake River white sturgeon from Idaho, Siberian sturgeon from a Florida farm and Shoults' personal favorite, Royal Belgian Osetra from Dr. Willy Verdonck's high-tech indoor farm.

Downtown wine bar haley. henry is likewise serving Royal Belgian and Snake River caviar. "They are famous for their crystal-clear spring water," general manager Kristie Weiss says of the latter. Those two offerings and roe from Tennessee paddlefish (a cousin of the sturgeon) are available by the spoon or as a "fleet" of three. But as for her preferred plating? "My favorite way to enjoy caviar is with an original Lay's potato chip and with good company!" / Jacqueline Houton

EATING OUT OF YOUR HAND

Those schmancy caviar spoons made from mother-of-pearl aren't only for show, as metal may taint the taste. But plastic spoons work too—or you could always eat it right out of your hand. Really: There's a long tradition of placing caviar on the back of your hand between your thumb and your index finger. "Eating caviar off your hand started because most people wanted to try the product before buying it," says Row 34 chef/co-owner Jeremy Sewall. "It was spooned onto the hand because no one wanted to share spoons for sanitary reasons, and this is long before disposable stuff." The tradition continues at Row 34, where guests on New Year's Eve gather around the bar, eating caviar off their fists; later this month, the restaurant will once again offer caviar and Krug Grand Cuvée Champagne at cost for the night. "We really wanted to do something celebratory for New Year's Eve that was a bit over the top but still in our wheelhouse," says Sewall, who still remembers the first time he enjoyed caviar by hand, back in the '90s at an event celebrating famed French chef Paul Bocuse. "While speeches were happening, Chef Bocuse found his way to the caviar display and started eating and spooning caviar onto the back of people's hands," Sewall recalls. "I don't know what was better: the caviar or that it was being spooned onto my hand by Paul Bocuse."

RUKA MOVE

RUKA
The Godfrey Hotel Boston, 505 Washington St., Boston
rukorestobar.com

WHATEVER YOU DO, DON'T CALL RUKA a follow-up to the wildly popular Yvonne's. Sure, the latest spot is the next project from the same team behind our 2016 pick for Boston's Best New Restaurant. But RUKA, which just opened in Downtown Crossing's Godfrey Hotel, has been in the works for a while.

"We started doing test menus before Yvonne's even opened," says Tom Berry, culinary director for the group, which also includes Back Bay's Lolita. "I was still in Nantucket at the time, and I flew off and did a dinner for some of the executives for the hotel group just to say, 'Hey, this is kind of what we were thinking.' "

What they were thinking was a concept that draws on Nikkei (Peruvian-Japanese) and Chifa (Peruvian-Chinese) cuisines. Berry tapped Preston Miller as the executive chef for RUKA and brought in Ting Yen as the executive sushi chef.

"I probably should have more of a tagline for the food, but I think I'd call it a fun and creative and somewhat approachable take on Peruvian and Japanese fish, vegetable and meat preparations, and also using some of the local, New England and regional fish that are available to us," Berry says.

The menu breaks down into six sections of shareable plates. The makimono include Terra Incognito, made with wild mushrooms, grilled leeks, pressed rice and mushroom foam, as well as Hamachi Amarillo, which pairs the fish with a baby corn and avocado roll, tomatillo salsa and jalapeno-corn sauce. The tiraditos include crunchy salmon tacos and penshell clam sashimi. Ceviches of Nantucket Bay scallops and halibut fill the chilled and raw grouping, while skewers of octopus and Sichuan king trumpet mushrooms dot the anticuchos section. Veggie fried rice and chicken fried rice make the hot-and-wok section, which also includes a green noodle dish with smoked cobia, curly udon, miso-dashi butter, basil and spinach. Monumental dishes include a whole crispy Japanese butterfish, which will cost $150.

"We sort of take it off the bone and almost cube it into nice chunks, then fry those, as well as the whole body, and then piece it back together on the platter. It's a little easier to eat than a typical whole fried fish, where you have the bones to worry about," Berry says. "It's larger, big, kind of over-the-top things."

The dessert menu from Liz O'Connell, the group's pastry chef, also includes a larger dish, a buttered taiyaki waffle with caramelized banana, lucuma ice cream, prickly pear sorbet, chocolate sauce, spicy peanut brittle and peanut butter caramel.

The 177-seat space, centered on an open kitchen, has ornate columns with dragon sculptures and multicolored Peruvian ropes hanging from charred Japanese wood beams on the ceiling.

"It's very different from Yvonne's," Berry explains. "This is a very ambitious project for us, and hopefully it will appeal to our customers from there, and hopefully a new group of customers who haven't been to Yvonne's."

LEG UP: Area Four's new South End spot offers exclusive dishes like the charred octopus.

Good Eats: Octo-Nom

Everyone knows about Area Four's pizzas, which even drew President Obama to the Cambridge spot last year. But it's more than just 'za that's heating up Area Four Boston, which opened in October inside the Troy Boston high-rise. A custom wood-fired oven is churning out dishes that are exclusive to the South End location, such as the charred octopus, a plate of tentacles that are poached for eight hours before getting a quick sear by the coals. They're served atop a salad of mizuna and parsley with a green tahini sauce, chickpeas, Castelvetrano olives and house-preserved lemons. "It sort of stays in line with what we do," executive chef Jeff Pond says. "A little rustic, but sort of approachable." / Meghan Kavanaugh

WHAT A GEM: David Friend funded the new hall at New Haven's Yale Peabody Museum of Natural History, which marked its 150th anniversary this year.

Minerals have fascinated David Friend ever since he came across mica and quartz on a construction site as a kid. Now visitors of all ages can marvel at giant gems at the Yale Peabody Museum of Natural History's recently unveiled David Friend Hall, home to more than $50 million in gems and minerals. We paid a visit to the Boston philanthropist and Yale alum's Back Bay apartment to see his personal treasure trove and learn more about what the 2,300-square-foot gallery has to offer. / Soroh Hogmon

THERE AREN'T TOO MANY SIGNS IN THE EXHIBIT HALL. WHAT'S THE THINKING BEHIND THAT APPROACH? Academic museums particularly always seem to want to teach something. .... [But] people gravitate toward the few big, flashy pieces in the room. I wanted something that would inspire kids to want to learn more, because if kids want to learn something, they'll learn it. You've got to have the equivalent of that 80-foot brontosaurus at Yale. When you look at them, they're just like, "I cannot believe that somebody pulled that out of the ground."

THE SHOWSTOPPERS INCLUDE YOUR GIANT AMETHYST GEODE. HOW DID IT COME TO BE IN YOUR COLLECTION? I talked to the guy who mined that. When they found the thing, they would drill a small whole in it and stick in one of those scopes—you know, that doctors use to look at your organs—and look around inside to see what's there before they start cutting. Ninety-nine percent of the time, it's nothing really spectacular, but every now and then they find a geode like that one that's just awe-inspiring to look at—beautiful dark purple crystals and this big, sparkly white calcite crystal. It was on the back of a truck in the mineral show in Tucson. Some friend of mine called me up: "Dave, you need to get down here right away." This guy had a truckload of stuff he had brought from Brazil and Uruguay. I saw it and negotiated and bought it right there in the back of the truck.

YOU ALSO CONTRIBUTED A 30-MILLION-YEAR-OLD SANDSTONE CONCRETION. WHERE DID IT COME FROM? There's a sand quarry in Fontainebleau that's been mined for its very pure white silica sand since the Middle Ages. It had been used to make the stained-glass windows in Notre Dame and all the great cathedrals in Europe. You know that glass pyramid at the Louvre? That's also made from this sand from this quarry. It's still being used. About 30 years ago, they were digging down at the bottom, and they struck these solid objects.

WHAT ABOUT THE SMALLER PIECES? The mineral world has gotten to be like the art world. Pieces are so expensive that museums can't afford to buy any of these things anymore. There's maybe a hundred major collectors in the country that own all the best pieces. I went to the ones that I knew, not knowing whether this would work, and I said, "I'd like you to let us borrow the very best stuff in your collections." To my surprise, everybody said yes. In fact, I had people who were mad at me because we didn't have room for their pieces. But they'll get their chance in the next go-around.

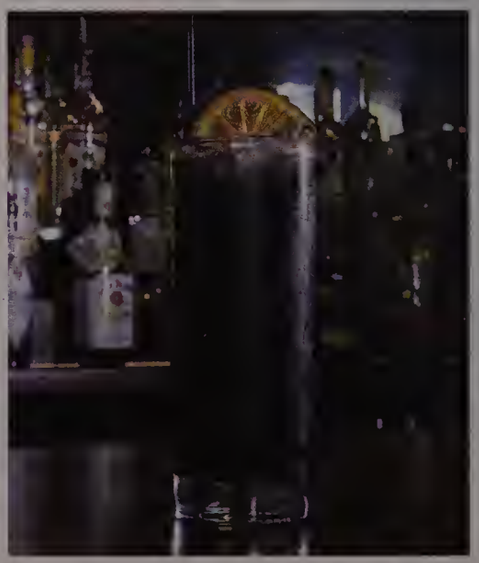
INGREDIENTS: Vodka, Gran Classico, crème de mure, lemon, activated charcoal



BLACK MAGIC: While looking at trends for Brass Union's latest menu, general manager and beverage director Paulo Pereira came across activated charcoal, touted as a hangover cure, skin care elixir and teeth whitener. Here, it lends both a fuller consistency and a moody look, but don't be scared off. "People think of burnt toast or a charred piece of steak," Pereira says. "It's visually aggressive, but I've heard people call it grape Kool-Aid."

FLAVOR PROFILE: With its orange and blackberry notes, this falls under the beginner section of the drink menu, stacked with easy sippers. "You could suck it down in two seconds if you wanted to," says Pereira, who recommends it for imbibers fond of Bee's Knees and Palomas. "I tell people all the time, there's nothing wrong with being a beginner."

MUSICAL NOTES: Garnished with a sunny lemon slice, the Day & Night also harks back to Kid Cudi's 2009 hit. Musical nods have popped up elsewhere on the cocktail list, as in the spirit-forward Satchmo Slur, which paid homage to Louis Armstrong. "We joked that if you have a couple of these you'll be slurring yourself." Beyond the bar, music curator Jeff Wallace crafts the restaurant's playlists and brings in local talent for live DJ nights, including Primitive Sounds, which has DJ Easy Ed and a guest spinning classic R&B and rock 'n' roll on vinyl twice a month.

SECOND ROUND: Ask Pereira for an intro to Japanese whisky while sipping on the latest cocktail on draft, a highball featuring a housemade ginger syrup, which he expects will last through January. / Soroh Hagman

Read up on two new local literary ventures. / Jacqueline Houton

AS THE BOOK BUYER at Partners Village Store in Westport, Elizabeth Lane is always on the hunt for page-turners. Now she's sharing finds with bookworms beyond the South Coast as the founder of Quarterlane, a subscription service that delivers three new reads every three months.

"I was inspired to find a way to bring the trust and discernment inherent within a local bookstore to the online space," Lane explains. "My hope with Quarterlane is also to shift a certain mindset around the perception of books—taking books from an item many customers now believe should be deeply discounted and elevating the printed book to the luxury status it so dearly deserves." Accordingly, she aims to make each delivery feel like a special one, filling the Winter Fiction box with Zadie Smith's Swing Time, Lucy Wood's Weathering and Alice Hoffman's Faithful, plus a few extra goodies, including a lavender-scented candle and a pint-sized custom artwork by Brooklyn illustrator Samantha Hahn.

Besides the signature fiction subscription, Lane has introduced a few themed collections, like the Aesthete, featuring coffee table toppers about fashion and design, and the Epicurean, a curated trio of cookbooks—expect second helpings of that one. "We will likely feature our Epicurean box again as I adore cookbooks," she says. "I find myself reading them in bed almost as often as I do fiction!"

JAMAICA PLAIN BOOKSTORE Papercuts marked its second birthday on November's Small Business Saturday, but that wasn't the only cause for celebration. Taking a page from legendary bookstores-slash-publishers like San Francisco's City Lights and Paris' Shakespeare and Company, owner Kate Layte and media and events director Katie Eelman launched the aptly named Cutlass Press.

"When a dear friend floated 'Cutlass,' we knew it was perfect—with the wordplay that fits so well into Papercuts, that we're women, and that the cutlass is a type of knife, and books are our weapons of choice," says Eelman, who's serving as editor-in-chief and shooting for three to five books a year. "There are so many wonderful writers whose work breaks the mold of traditional publishing. We want to help to amplify those voices." Take local music icon Rick Berlin, author of inaugural release The Paragraphs, a memoir told in fragments of songwriting exercises, or local crime writer Christopher Irvin, whose forthcoming novel Ragged will follow an animal community—Eelman dubs it "Fargo meets Wind in the Willows."

She and Layte had planned to launch Cutlass come spring, but recent events spurred them to speed ahead. "We were selling books at Papercuts the morning after the election and talked with a bunch of heartbroken, frightened customers," Eelman recalls. "We wanted to celebrate the right to free press, express power in art and creation, and reassure our community that discussion, free thinking and damn good books weren't going away."

Out of 25 YEARS THE VAULT

The Improper is celebrating its 25th anniversary in 2016, and to properly mark the occasion, we've been digging through the archives for gems from issues past. Behold, some bygone fancy features, such as dish from local luxury hotel concierges and a day in the life of would-be gazillionaire Jonathan Soroff.

March 13, 1996

In this cover story, social columnist Jonathan Soroff gamely posed as a billionaire playboy for a day, shopping for obscenely large diamonds, attempting to purchase a million-dollar sports car and pricing out a polo team sponsorship. He noted, "Unlike those of us who, as Errol Flynn once put it, have to reconcile our gross habits with our net income, your unlimited buying power allows you to bypass envy and cut straight to greed."

May 23, 2001

In a cover story titled "At Your Service," we interviewed people with keys to some of the most exclusive doors in the city—top hotel concierges. Accustomed to outrageous requests, the seasoned pros gave us the dirt on some of the most memorable demands their pampered clients have made. Like: "I once had a guest who needed a special incubator designed specifically for ostrich eggs," recalled David Jamieson, a (then) 33-year veteran of the Copley Plaza Hotel. Talk about rare birds.

April 19, 2006

In this Luxury issue (which also contained a not-so-PC "Gold Digger's Guide" to marrying a millionaire), we profiled local fashion scion Alan Bilzerian and asked him what public figure he thought was in most dire need of a fashion makeover. His answer: "Oh, shit. You don't have enough room. But Donald Trump would top the list." Still true.

THE OCEAN'S DEVOTIONS

AN ELITE SWIMMER SHARES HOW SHE HEALED A BROKEN HEART AND RETURNED TO THE OPEN WATER.

Swimming in the Sink* by Lynne Cox
Published by Knopf, 240 pages, $25

BOSTON-BORN LYNNE COX GREW UP TO become an indomitable swimmer in wild oceans. At 15, she'd swum across the English Channel; at 45, she swam more than a mile in 32-degree water off Antarctica, wetsuit-free. In acts of liquid diplomacy, Cox swam between countries in tension, traversing the Bering Strait to promote peace between the United States and the Soviet Union and later stroking heroically from Argentina to Chile to foster cooperation there.

In previous books and this new memoir, her writing captures both her icy exhilaration in these extraordinary athletic adventures and the spiritual connection with nature her unique ocean-going made possible. But this chronicle focuses on a daunting challenge on dry land. After the deaths of her ailing parents, whom she'd patiently cared for, Cox became the patient, suffering from atrial fibrillation as a result of the appropriately named broken heart syndrome. Treatments ensued; the threat of a possible heart transplant loomed. Swimming, of course, had to be suspended for a time, though she "swam" using the sink as her mini-ocean, moving her arms through ice water to reacclimate to the cold.

Friendships, including one with a doctor who anxiously feared Cox's death, sustained her. And the energy she'd given to swimming was redirected into the discipline of emotional bravery. An injured firefighter friend, affectionate and philosophical, helped her set new goals. And there's romance, too. She finds cozy confluence with Steven, a musical man, discovering real synchronicity between their worlds. Cox must have a mystical pen that can write in the water, as she captures its immediacy beautifully.

FROM PAGE 45: When I am swimming I feel like a musician discovering nuances in sound, color, and rhythm. My body is the instrument and the ocean is the symphony. I immerse myself in music and hear and feel the ocean's movements. We create music together. I hear the driving beat of my arms and legs and the song of my breath and bubbles. ◆

TURN A NEW LEAF

DRINK IN THE FLAVORS AND SUMPTUOUS COLORS OF THE OFFSEASON KENNEBUNKS.

MANY NEW ENGLANDERS THINK OF the bridge-adjoined towns of Kennebunk and Kennebunkport, Maine, as summer destinations for well-heeled preppies in pursuit of upcharged clambakes and pristine—if crowded—beaches. However, the savvy weekend jaunter would do well to trade the Nantucket Reds and boat shoes for a scarf and boots: The Kennebunks, most famously home to the Bush family's summer compound, also make for a cozy offseason retreat for the leaf-peeping set.

And the peeping is good. Come late fall, the Maine coastline is set ablaze in deep reds and burnished golds, providing striking contrast to the craggy jetties and still harbors where sailboats and weathered fishing trawlers remain moored, more for scenery than use as the mercury dips. Moor yourself at the quietly elegant White Barn Inn, nestled in the woods just a short walk from Kennebunkport's main drag.

The five-diamond resort houses a much-lauded five-star restaurant, and recent renovations that refurbished 11 of the 26 rooms also added a more casual bistro. A steaming mug of whiskey-spiked cider in the lobby provides warm welcome—and the fortitude needed to leave behind the resort's cushy amenities for a bracing stroll into town (or a bike ride, as the inn offers free rentals, complete with wicker baskets).

Your first stop: Coffee Roasters of the Kennebunks. A large cast-iron roaster serves as the bustling shop's centerpiece, and a cup of strong, aromatic coffee will run you one dollar—you may think you heard the friendly proprietor incorrectly. After you've recovered from this reverse sticker shock, browse the shop's wares, which include artisanal olive oils, jars of various pickled delights, bulk tea and spices and, of course, bags of fragrant, nutty beans to take home; the French roast is particularly fine.

Once you're properly caffeinated, it's time to sightsee. Whether by bicycle or by car (or by foot if you're intrepid), a trip along the winding coastline is mandatory. Photo-ops of sweeping harbor vistas, backlit by fiery foliage, wait around every bend of the road—including the aforementioned Bush compound. Snap a pic for the folks but don't attempt an up-close look; two imposing black SUVs sit in the sprawling estate's drive, even in the offseason. Never mind, as political buffs can get a fix at the Ramp, a quirky, ramshackle dive that offers unparalleled views of Cape Porpoise Harbor. Order a lobster roll and a bowl of chowder (both authentic and tasty) and post up at the bar to ogle the restaurant's many pieces of flair—signed Patriots helmets, vintage Sox pennants, old Bush and Kerry campaign posters, a splintered Boston police barricade, a framed black-and-white photograph of George and Barbara and, in the corner, a leering piñata caricature of one Donald J. Trump. Not a surface or raw wooden beam is left uncovered.

One could easily linger over pints all day, watching the sun dip below the tree line and paint the harbor with even more vivid brushstrokes, but there's more to see—and to drink. Stop back at the inn for a warm sweater and teatime in the drawing room. Sip some Earl Grey or grab a snifter of good brandy from one of two large glass tumblers that guests are welcome to tap at their discretion. Thusly fortified, make your way back into town, this time to Federal Jack's, a brewpub that sits above the Kennebunkport Brewing Company, a seven-barrel brewery from which the now Portland-based Shipyard Brewing Company was born. Peek in the open windows at the beer brewing in large metal vats and read the placards that serve as a DIY brewery tour and explain KBC's brewing process—all to better your understanding of what you'll be quaffing upstairs, where the hopping Federal Jack's offers seven drafts. Order the Old Thumper, a 1985 British Grand Champion bitter ale, or a flight to sample them all.

If vino is more to your taste, end your afternoon at Old Vines Wine Bar, a chic purveyor of offbeat wines from small producers around the world that wash down tasty nibbles (spring for two orders of the fried shishito peppers with Hawaiian sea salt and Japanese mayo). Pro tip: There's a nightly happy hour from 5 to 6 pm that grants 50 percent off any 6-ounce pour. If the weather permits, take your wine outside to recline in one of the Adirondack chairs or at one of the picnic tables that surround a blazing fire pit. Make friends with the other sweater-bundled drinkers around the fire: You'll be seeing them later for a nightcap at Ryan's Corner House Irish Pub & Restaurant, a no-frills dive that serves as your last stop before you sink into sleep beside your crackling in-room fireplace back at the White Barn, a snifter of brandy glowing warmly on the bedside table. ◆

BESO EN LA BOCA

EN BOCA BRINGS UNCOMMON VERVE TO MEDITERRANEAN SMALL PLATES.

DESPITE HAVING TAKEN THE BOSTON dining scene by storm more than 10 years ago, the small plates concept remains a divisive one. Objections range from "I never know how many dishes to order," to "Seems like a bill-padding scam to me," to "I hate to share." Myself, I respect the ancient cuisines from which the tradition springs, much prefer five or 10 tastes to a rote app-entree-dessert progression and have family and friends who are the sharing type. But if you're going to offer a long menu of short courses, you had better execute consistently. En Boca, a new Harvard Square small-plates restaurant that laps the Mediterranean with accents from Portugal to the Levant to the Maghreb, manages to do exactly that, with occasional flashes of unexpected French refinement.

Executive chef Benjamin Lacy doubtless honed some of that Gallic flair and love of local sourcing in previous stints at Ten Tables Cambridge and Bondir. Wolf Meadow Farm ricotta ($8) could not be simpler—a fine, tangy sheep's-milk ricotta sprinkled with teeny wild herbs and served with good grilled Iggy's bread. There's some beautiful local foraging reflected in a generous bowl of fire-roasted wild mushrooms ($10), plus a fierce whiff of garlic and savory fresh herbs. (Skip the $8 Burgundy black truffle upgrade, which barely registers.) A blackboard behind the bar lists a few options for charcuterie and cheese, including worthy entrants like Vermont's Blue Ledge Farm blue ($6), tastily arrayed with marmalades and preserves, pickled red onions, fried almonds, baharat-dusted olives and more good bread.

Slow-roasted beets ($9) get a pretty plating and balance to their sweetness from rainbow radish slices and some eye-watering horseradish-flavored cloumage; this underlying layer of sauce or vegetable puree is a Lacy leitmotif. Familiar blistered shishito peppers ($9) get a nutty, garlicky lift from breadcrumbs tinged with Catalan romesco. Cauliflower ($9) and Brussels sprouts ($9) receive the ubiquitous-for-a-reason treatment of crisp frying plus a fatty accent, respectively strained yogurt (with Indian-inspired spicing) and skin-on pork belly. Poached farm egg ($13) is a dish of gentle comfort, the egg haloed by oily, spicy, minced chorizo, all resting atop a bed of soft, buttery polenta. Grilled oysters ($12) dress perfect local specimens in a dark, umami-rich bagna cauda and top them with little curls of pickled sunchoke: three superb little bites.

HOLLY RIKE

Heartier meat- and seafood-centric plates swell to the size of generous conventional appetizers. Baked piquillos ($15), vividly red sweet peppers, get a rich, tender filling of braised beef shank—oxtail on another visit was as delectable—and some good celery-root slaw. Lamb meatballs ($14) are crisp and juicy, sounding another subcontinental echo with Madras-style curry in the turnip puree underneath and a crisp turnip/pepper chutney on top. Wood-grilled octopus ($15) offers one example of Lacy's pinpoint cooking of cephalopods: The entire tentacle, from its meaty upper portion to its skinny tip, boasts both char and elusive tenderness, a thin chermoula on the plate offering an evocative whiff of North Africa. Another is baby squid a la plancha ($11), which also triangulates perfect tender doneness, pine nuts offering crunchy, sweet contrast to vinegary pickled peppers—like a healthier, more balanced rendition of Rhode Island-style fried calamari.

A couple of heftier entrees serve as big shareable centerpieces for two or more, like braised Rhode Island lamb neck ($29), a gorgeous hunk of tender and fatty lamb, and a superb version of a roasted half-chicken ($25), which Lacy brines for most of a day and then sous-vides in duck fat to fantastically juicy, flavorful results. With its sides of chunky sunchoke puree, baby arugula and skinny sunchoke pickles, this could also serve as a single-plate meal for the dyed-in-the-wool small-plates hater.

The short dessert list again straddles French classicism and further-eastern Med flavors. A pots de crème ($9) comes topped with preserves, chopped pistachios and crushed nougat, while a fluffy rendition of the Egyptian semolina cake babousa ($9) is rum-glazed and dolloped with sweet chantilly crème. Specialty cocktails aim culinary and tend to land sweet, as in the Brattleberry ($13) of gin, orange and elderflower liqueurs, lemon, blackberries and a fizz of sparkling wine. Wine lovers are better served by a couple dozen by-the-glass options (most in the $8-$13 range, a few fancier ones $16-$35, all kept fresh by an argon-gas system) and more than 40 bottles ($35-$115, most under $60), leaning heavily on France, Italy, Spain and Greece, plus half-a-dozen sherries ($6-$25). Beer and cider geeks get good attention with six drafts and two dozen packaged options ($4-$26) sourced mainly from New England.

The romantically dimly lit 86-seat dining room and spacious 18-seat bar get a little streetlight from the tall front windows, though monotone accents and dark wood throughout soak most of that up, a few eye-catching paintings and objets d'art providing rare splashes of color. Service runs a little young and green but exhibits just enough polish not to undermine the elegant-casual vibe. In a town awash in well-intended but often-pedestrian mezze and tapas, En Boca brings a welcome culinary eclecticism and just enough French refinement to gain a distinctive place in our small-plates firmament. ◆

Q: I'D LIKE TO TRY PLUMPING UP MY LIPS WITH FILLER BUT I DON'T WANT DUCK LIPS!

A: I understand; we have all seen pictures of celebrities with freakishly big lips. The key is to exercise restraint and to be conservative! Lip injections should look totally natural. Start with just a little; you can always add more.

Folks in their 20s and 30s use filler to make their lips more sensuous and to add a little pouf. People of all ages use lip fillers to enhance and add definition to either the upper lip, lower lip, or both.

Lip fillers are extremely safe. They are composed of hyaluronic acid, a clear gel that is soft and pliable. Lip injections actually don't hurt due to the fact that lidocaine, a numbing agent, is mixed into the syringe. The most popular brands are Restylane and Juvederm; there is now a new filler, Juvederm Vobella, that will last a full year.

FOR THE DREAMERS

DAMIEN CHAZELLE'S TOE-TAPPING THROWBACK TO MUSICALS PAST IS ONE FOR THE HEART.

IF YOU'VE EVER BEEN CAUGHT IN STAND-STILL traffic on the way to work, with no possibility of movement on the horizon, you've likely fantasized about simply abandoning your vehicle right there on the highway and walking. In the audacious opening sequence of Damien Chazelle's swooningly romantic La La Land, the drivers trapped on the ramp connecting Interstate 105 to the 110 in Los Angeles do exactly that, but their next actions are even more unexpected: One by one, they begin to sing, then dance, until every last person has shed their seat belts to form a limber chorus line freed from the shackles of commuter frustration. Over the next few minutes, Chazelle will take your breath away as he mounts a jaw-dropping production number that will set your toes tapping. Even if you're not a fan of movie musicals, he'll quite possibly make a convert out of you.

Providence-born, Harvard-educated writer/director Chazelle, a 31-year-old who broke through two years ago with Whiplash, another picture built on a backbone of jazz-inflected beats, is smart to immediately announce what you'll be in for with this bravura calling card that sets the tone for the two hours to come. While Whiplash turned on the intense battle of wills between Miles Teller's drum student and J.K. Simmons' drill sergeant-like instructor, here Chazelle has crafted something closer in spirit to his little-seen 2009 debut, Guy and Madeline on a Park Bench, a black-and-white, Boston- and New York-set romantic charmer that fused Hollywood musical traditions with a verite style that would have made the late, great John Cassavetes proud.

Not content to simply repeat himself, Chazelle immediately and slyly announces his grander ambitions for La La Land when the boxy, black-and-white frame that first appears in the center of the screen expands outward to reveal a wildly colorful, ultra-widescreen image that's been overlaid with the classic CinemaScope logo, denoting films that that have been lensed in the 2.55:1 aspect ratio. Taking advantage of the extra real estate afforded them by this format, Chazelle and ace cinematographer Linus Sandgren (American Hustle) push their incredibly agile camera in and around the performers who leap and twirl over their cars' hoods in one long, seemingly unbroken take (which actually entailed a weekend of location shooting on the real I-105).

Composer Justin Hurwitz, who's scored all three of Chazelle's films, provides stellar accompaniment as the singers and dancers celebrate "Another Day of Sun" via catchy lyrics (courtesy of Benj Pasek and Justin Paul). But it's actually winter in LA, and the warmth of this sequence ends with a sudden chill when the big-band beats cede and the camera settles on the raised middle finger of aspiring actress Mia (Emma Stone). She's been too distracted running lines in her Prius en route to an audition to notice Sebastian (Ryan Gosling), the jazz pianist who's been fruitlessly trying to pass her in the traffic jam. In what will become a running gag, "Seb" loudly honks the horn of his convertible to get Mia's attention, prompting her to flip him off.

DALE ROBINETTE

LA LA LAND ★★★★

Starring Emma Stone, Ryan Gosling, John Legend, Rosemarie DeWitt, Damon Gupton, Terry Walters, Callie Hernandez, Sonoya Mizuno, Jessica Rothe, Finn Wittrock, Josh Pence, Nicole Coulon and J.K. Simmons. Written and directed by Damien Chazelle. At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.

This is the first time Seb and Mia will cross paths, but it certainly won't be the last. As winter gives way to spring, they continue to drift into each other's orbit, unable to escape love's gravitational pull during a series of song-and-dance numbers (many of them exquisitely captured during the magic hour by Sandgren) that culminate with the duo quite literally lifting into orbit, dancing among the stars projected on the Griffith Observatory's Art Deco dome in Los Feliz.

To casual viewers, it might appear that Chazelle shares their appreciation for the MGM musicals of the '40s and '50s, but those with a more expansive cinematic palate may recognize that his heart beats with a passion for the '60s confections of French director Jacques Demy and composer Michel Legrand, whose best-known collaboration remains 1964's plaintive romantic drama The Umbrellas of Cherbourg. Chazelle draws even greater inspiration from Demy and Legrand's lighter, later effort, 1967's The Young Girls of Rochefort, from its bright primary colors to its emphasis on jazz and large-scale dance numbers.

Which isn't to say that he leaves the magic of Hollywood behind altogether. While Legrand was fond of moving his musicals forward almost exclusively through song, Chazelle transitions his actors from dialogue to singing and dancing when it feels organic and natural, like in, say, 1951's An American in Paris—and the results are electric. If you're a fan of Vincente Minnelli's multiple Oscar winner, then you'll absolutely recognize echoes of that film's climactic flight of fancy between Gene Kelly and Leslie Caron in Chazelle's masterful staging of a dream-like dancing duet.

This scene benefits hugely from the preceding two hours we've spent getting to know Seb and Mia, characters who are fully formed, warts and all, thanks to the sympathetic and heartbreaking performances of Gosling and, especially, Stone. Working together for the third time (after 2011's Crazy, Stupid, Love and 2013's Gangster Squad) has clearly contributed to a winning chemistry that more than makes up for the creaky old trope—boy meets girl, boy loses girl, boy tries to win her back—that plays out across the film's four seasons. Despite this narrative familiarity, the emotional payoff Chazelle builds toward is huge, and as Stone plaintively croons in one of this tale of love and sacrifice's lovely songs, it will speak volumes to "the ones who dream." ◆

HOLIDAY GREETINGS

THE OH HELLOS' CHRISTMAS EXTRAVAGANZA plays the Paradise Rock Club on Dec. 17.

With a nine-piece band that boasts a banjo, a violin and two drummers, the Oh Hellos know how to harness some glorious chaos. "We're really fortunate to have these really stellar musicians who rise to every challenge we put to them and manage to be wildly energetic and look like they're going to hurt themselves," says Tyler Heath, who co-leads the folk-rock outfit with his sister Maggie.

Hopefully the musicians won't sustain bodily injury—even if they overdo it for the holidays—when the group invades the Paradise Rock Club on Dec. 17 as part of an eight-city tour dubbed the Oh Hellos' Christmas Extravaganza.

"We bring in the endearing family awkwardness that we grew up with," says Tyler, 28, noting the siblings had to "perform in front of the whole family, which is now what we do for a living. Everything about Christmas as we were growing up, everything that we felt, enjoyed and endured, we'll try to share that."

There's nothing awkward, however, about The Oh Hellos' Family Christmas Album, released in late 2013 and repackaged last year but never supported on tour before. "I think we've played it live at three shows," he says, "and one of them was a New Year's show, which might have been an ill-considered move."

Most pop acts that offer seasonal tidings tend to play the repertoire fairly straight. But for their Christmas record, the Oh Hellos drew on orchestral ambitions to craft four movements that weave several carols (including "O Come All Ye Faithful," "Silent Night" and "Joy to the World") into original arrangements that blend solemnity and exultation. On tour, they'll contrast those hymns with other Christmas tunes that singer/guitarist Tyler describes as "definitely silly."

"Everything's going to feel and look real Christmasy," he says of a live show to be evenly split between holiday fare and the Oh Hellos' own originals. Yet perhaps it's fitting that a group that began in 2011 after the siblings recorded a song for their mother's birthday would indulge in such a family-centric holiday.

"We bring in the endearing family awkwardness that we grew up with."

"We did grow up in a musical family," singer Maggie, 24, says on a joint call with her brother from their home base in San Marcos, Texas, noting that their mother was the daughter of a band director. "We grew up in a very encouraging atmosphere and took piano at an early age, whether we wanted to or not."

The Heath kids grew up on a '90s diet of contemporary Christian music ("Because that's where the car radio was always tuned," Tyler says). Maggie participated in choir, and they both played in the high school band. But she later fell for the pop band OK Go as well as metal, while he shifted from Christian rap-rockers DC Talk to the quirky pop cult band Tally Hall. And they both became fans of Sufjan Stevens, whose use of banjo in orchestral indie-rock clearly echoes in the guest-dotted The Oh Hellos' Family Christmas Album.

"One of the big things for me that I like about Sufjan's music, and specifically the banjo, is that he doesn't play it in a bluegrass style," Tyler says. "He plays it like finger plucks. It's softer and gentler."

For the Oh Hellos' own dynamics—which swing from solemn to giddy, from almost a cappella vocals to textural outbursts—Tyler also credits his study of classical orchestral composition. "Those big dynamic ranges, I love that kind of stuff," he says, "and I'm always trying to bring more of that into the music that we write."

Perhaps that's why it didn't take long for the siblings—who made the Oh Hellos' 2012 full-length debut Through the Deep, Dark Valley almost entirely by themselves as a bedroom project—to enlist other players, largely to convey the music onstage.

"We thought we'd put that record out and no one would pay attention, and we'd say, 'OK, we enjoyed that,'" Tyler says, calling their growth "incredible." In more ways than one. Of their current, electric live nine-piece, he says, "The energy shoots through the roof." ◆

FOOL'S GOLD

THE ONE GOOD THING ABOUT BEING DUMB? YOU'RE NOT ALONE.

THIS IS A SAFE PLACE TO TALK ABOUT stupid people. Because if you're reading this, then, ipso facto, you're smart. And anyway, I have license to talk about dimwits and mouth-breathers, because I are one. For the past 10 weeks or so, I've been living la vida dum-dum.

Here's what happened: I was out in my garage, working on the awesome street-legal golf cart that I bought from a military surplus auction, as one does. Abruptly, I felt woozy, and I staggered inside to the kitchen, where I sat down on the floor with the room spinning. It felt like I'd been tapped by a magic wand that made me instantly drunk, which isn't as cool as it sounds. The spins quickly subsided, but ever since then—late September—I've been a little bit off-kilter, balance-wise. When I turn my head, there's a subtle delay on the vestibular adjustment. It's like I've stepped through a portal and I'm experiencing the world from the perspective of Wiz Khalifa after a lengthy bong sesh. Which, again, isn't as cool as it sounds.

The verdict is that I've got some sort of inner-ear infection or disorder, and apparently the way you deal with those is to take a handful of motion-sickness pills and wait it out. After a while, your brain is supposed to recognize the bad signal and compensate for it automatically. In the meantime, you look normal but feel like a Nebraskan dropped onto the deck of the Andrea Gail during The Perfect Storm. Billy, can ya hear me? You're headed right for the middle of the monstah!

The dizziness is unpleasant on its own, but it also comes with an insidious side effect: It's made me dumb. Or at least, dumber. Look, I was never getting the invite for Mensa in the first place, but this balance problem seems to have eroded my cognitive capabilities, too. The mental horsepower that I'm devoting to staying upright has to come from somewhere, and I feel like most of the people featured in Making a Murderer probably have a few IQ points on me right now. Perhaps I could move to Wisconsin, steer clear of the Manitowoc police and just run a nice junkyard or something. People around there would refer to me as "Smart Ez" because when I yell wrong answers during Jeopardy! I remember to put them in the form of a question.

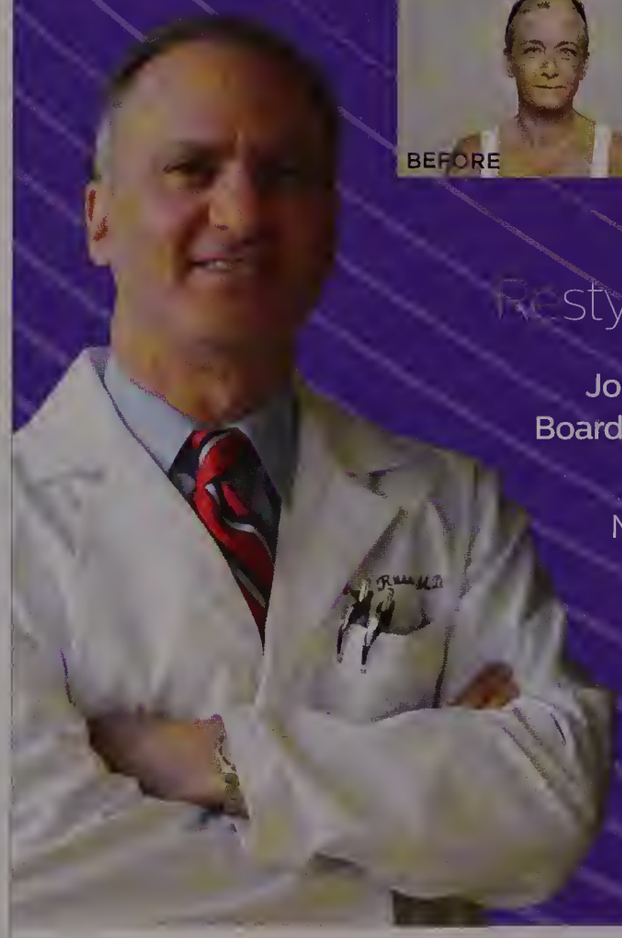
DOUBLE TROUBLE: Feeling dizzy and dumb can be a bad combo.

The unfortunate fact is that smart people are a minority and the evidence is everywhere. Remember a couple of months ago when that plane was burning on the runway at O'Hare and a video showed some of the passengers just casually walking away? Hey, it's only a few thousand gallons of jet fuel raging into an all-consuming inferno right behind you—no need to hurry. Not that you really could anyway, since you took the time to grab your wheelie bag. When faced with the choice between Joan of Arc-style immolation or losing your travel-sized Colgate, you gotta wrestle that carry-on out of the overhead bin and saunter to safety.

There are more examples. Endless ones, really. If you want to question the primacy of mankind, just go take a drive somewhere. It'll be less than 10 minutes before you witness a maneuver that prompts you to conclude that we'd be better off if evolution had gone in a different direction and humans were the stars of Land World, a theme park built by the dolphins.

If you're none too bright, then you'd better be friendly and attractive, and I'm afraid I'm striking out there, too.

I recently met a friend of Neil deGrasse Tyson, and I said, "Tell Neil that he's lucky his parents didn't name him Maurice. Because then his name would be Mo deGrasse." Get it? Like a lawnmower! I don't understand why people in Australia don't fall off the earth.



If you're none too bright, then you'd better be friendly and attractive, and I'm afraid I'm striking out there, too. Exercise is highly unpleasant on shaky sea legs, so I haven't been working out as often. And the general feeling of crappiness instills a short temper. For example, I recently installed a doorstop in a bathroom, and I positioned it too far down the wall to prevent the door from hitting a towel rack (see: dumbness, thorough). Somehow, both my mother-in-law and my sister-in-law's boyfriend ended up in the bathroom with me, critiquing my doorstop position. Under normal circumstances, I'd laugh at the absurdity of this situation and perhaps make a wry comment about practical applications of the Pythagorean theorem. Instead, I said, "Thanks for the advice, construction experts!" and stormed out in a tantrum. Life is hard when you're fat, dumb and angry.

I'm hoping that my condition is temporary and I'll soon return to being a prime specimen of humanity. But in case I don't, I'm ready to embrace my new normal. I'll LOL at Kevin Can Wait and uncritically believe every story that gets shared on Facebook. You know, like millions and millions of other people. I might be dumb, but at least I won't be lonely. ◆

Soroff On / Tracee Chimo

LEADING LADY

THE FINGERSMITH ACTRESS RIFFS ON HER POTTY MOUTH, HER SINGING VOICE AND PLAYING BADDIES

ACTRESS TRACEE CHIMO IS CURRENTLY STARRING as a Victorian pickpocket in the American Repertory Theater's production of Fingersmith, playing at the Loeb Drama Center in Cambridge through Jan. 8. Born and raised in Saugus, Chimo studied acting at Salem State College and moved to New York to pursue her career. In 2009, she appeared in Circle Mirror Transformation and followed it up with Bachelorette, but her breakthrough role was in the darkly comic play Bad Jews. On television, she has appeared on Orange Is the New Black and The Good Wife, and her film credits include Judd Apatow's The Five-Year Engagement and Clint Eastwood's Sully. She can now be seen in People of Earth, a TBS comedy about a support group for alien abductees that premiered in October. She lives in New York.

JONATHAN SOROFF: So are you a fingersmith?
TRACEE CHIMO: Am I a thief? No. I used to steal bubblegum when I was a kid. But I'm not a skilled pickpocket.

Did you study it for this role? I did. I studied a lot of the thieves in Victorian England, and they were primarily women, which I did not know. Isn't that amazing? So many women. I think it was easier for them to get closer to wealthy guys.

What else did you pick up? Well, especially in the East End, they were very tomboyish, and I'm sort of a tomboy. I gravitated toward them. A lot of them dressed in men's clothing, and they were small. They were sneaky and fast.

Your favorite thing about Saugus? The Hilltop Steakhouse, which is no longer there. The orange dinosaur... Seriously, I loved growing up there. We were always in Boston, and it was only 15 minutes away by T.

Thing you miss most about Boston? I miss every single thing, all the time. I am constantly missing Boston. I have a real love relationship with this city. I come back as often as I possibly can. One of the reasons I wanted this job so badly was to be back here. The vibe here is a little more chill than New York City. It's a little more relaxed. And I miss sports. I'm a huge Red Sox and Bruins fan. I started going to Bruins games when I was 3 with my dad.

Most Bostonian thing about you? My potty mouth. I swear like a truck driver.

People of Earth*—do you believe in aliens? No, I've never really thought about them.

What drew you to that role? I was so interested in being in a comedy and in playing a girl who was in a bad marriage. Playing someone who's going through something super-emotional and yet being part of a comedic show—it was interesting. As the show goes on and more episodes come out, you'll see that the arc of Chelsea is quite big, on the scale of something that's devastating, like being emotionally distanced from your partner or a marriage breaking up.

What do you think the play Bad Jews says about people? You know, everybody always asks me, or a lot of people think, that that play is about being Jewish. It's not. It's about being a part of a family. Everybody can relate to that. Everybody fights with their family. Especially when they're devastated by something like a death.

"I don't really have any interest in playing the same role twice.... I try to choose things that will challenge me and push me."

Did you get a lot of flak for playing that role? I did. A lot of people had a problem with my character. I got heckled a lot. And the playwright, Josh Harmon, always said to me, "It's because the character is female. I guarantee you if I had written her to be a male, people would just be like, 'Wow, that's a strong person.'" I got bothered coming out of the theater. That play made people really angry.

Biggest audition disaster story? Oh, God. So many! But the one that's sticking out to me is when I auditioned for Bullets Over Broadway for Woody Allen. I honked in front of him. I don't sing that much. I just stunk. It was awful. Susan Stroman, the big choreographer and director, had me sing "Happy Birthday," because I'd bombed my audition so badly. They called me back a week later, and I said no.

Worst job you ever had while you were a struggling actor? I had a lot, because I didn't work for the first seven or eight years that I was in New York. I was a dog-walker, which I loved. I was a bartender at a little bar in the East Village. It was called Jimmy's No. 43, and I was there for about two years. First I was a waitress there, and then they moved me over to the bar, because I was a terrible waitress. I didn't hate either of those jobs, or even when I was cutting keys at a hardware store. The only one I really hated was when I was a temp at an advertising firm, and the people were so horrific. I felt so small. The boss was sleeping with one of the women at the firm, and I would hear them having sex in his office. It was awful.

You've been praised repeatedly for your ability to completely disappear into a role. Do you come by that naturally? First of all, thank you. That's incredibly flattering to hear. I don't really have any interest in playing the same role twice, so maybe that's where that comes into play. I try to choose things that will challenge me and push me out of whatever box I might be in.

Is there an actor whose career you'd like to emulate? Definitely Helena Bonham Carter. She always plays those offbeat, different kinds of characters. I really respond to that...

Except that she can sing. [Laughs.] I know! I've gotta work on that. I also love Kate Winslet, Cate Blanchett, Marion Cotillard, Tilda Swinton.

What do you think your single biggest asset is as an actor? I like to surprise the people that I'm working with on stage. I like to do things that are not conventional. For instance, this character in Fingersmith is unlike most female roles, and I like to make those characters as real as possible.

Any role you feel you were born to play? Harley Quinn in the Batman movies. [Laughs.] I love to play bad people. Maleficent is a big one. I loved her.

Thoughts on theater critics? [The plastic fork with which she's eating a salad snaps in two, and she breaks into hysterics.] That's my answer. [Laughs.] It's perfect. I actually don't read reviews. I think they're for producers and other people. I don't think actors should read their reviews. You can't let everyone grade your paper. ◆

STAND THE HEAT

HEAD INTO THE KITCHEN FOR THE ULTIMATE IN FINE DINING.

SOUNDTRACKS TO KITCHENS in even the finest dining establishments can be a cacophony of controlled chaos: pots clanging onto the range, meat sizzling in oil, flames shooting up around the edges of pans, shouts of "Yes, chef!" as orders are placed. But instead of keeping the scene hidden behind closed doors, a number of restaurants around the city invite guests to dine mere feet away from the action. For those celebrating a special occasion, the chef's table is now an option to rival the quiet candlelit corner, and while custom touches can range from menu personalization to tabletop decor, what really helps diners stand the heat in the kitchen is the personal attention from the chefs themselves.

Take Outlook Kitchen and Bar executive chef Tatiana Rosana, who embarked on a special field trip when a guest booked the chef's table for his wife's birthday, aiming to accommodate her food preferences and strict religious diet.

"In order to make the experience as enjoyable for her as possible, I actually went with them to the farmers market before their dinner," Rosana recalls. "She handpicked the ingredients she liked. She taught me about her religious restrictions, and we tailored her menu before she even stepped foot in the restaurant."

The couple then dined at the two seats located at the end of the chef's pass between the dining room and the open French kitchen, watching Rosana plate dishes with the precision and artistry one would expect from a chef with a background in both art and biomedical science.

"All the dishes get plated for the entire dining room right in front of our guests," she explains. "Tickets are called, dishes are fired, food is seasoned and tasted, and they get to experience it all. I get to interact with our guests face-to-face throughout the night."

And though the table doesn't cost more than any other Outlook reservation for two, it also comes with personalized attention from the bar staff, who help guests pair cocktails or wine with each course.

"So few moments in our industry allow for us to get as intimate with our guests and our food as our chef's table does," Rosana says. "I want them to feel the soul of the menu, the pulse of the kitchen."

In return, restaurant staff get to witness some pretty special moments themselves. Bar Boulud's Samantha Harrison, who manages private dining reservations, recalls an evening when a couple got engaged while enjoying the seven-course chef's tasting menu in the 10-seat private room overlooking the kitchen. "The gentleman proposed after the main course, and the woman was so surprised and excited, she began crying," Harrison says. "We actually had to hold the next course until she could regain her composure."

Also located in a private room off the kitchen, the chef's table at Menton has a prime view of the cooking via a glass partition that also lets the culinary staff witness celebrations of all kinds. Seating up to 14, the space has been the site of many a proposal, as well as events like a 13-year-old's birthday party (complete with a magician and balloons), an opera performance, a cancer survivor's thank-you dinner for supportive friends and family and even a quiet evening for new parents who booked the table so they could have a night out with their 6-month-old without disturbing anyone.

"We want our guests to feel like they're enjoying dinner in our home," says Menton chef de cuisine Scott Jones. "I make sure to interact with every group, hear their story, share a few and usually have a glass of wine with them."

The entire kitchen gets in on the fun, singing "Happy Birthday" and plating dishes with candles. "Sometimes guests want the kitchen to greet them with a certain phrase or take photos with the kitchen staff in the middle of service," Jones says. "While they see how serious we are and how intense the kitchen can be, they also get to see how much fun we have."

Then, of course, there's the gourmet meal, which often starts with flutes of Champagne, followed by a six- or eight-course tasting menu, each with the option to add wine pairings, caviar and cheese courses, oysters and white alba truffles when they're in season. Guests can even plan their own goodie bags, taking home treats like macarons or chocolate truffles. Menus can be personalized with anniversary wishes or a company's logo, and each element of the decor is customizable as well, down to the flowers on the table. The restaurant's own florist regularly works within each guest's budget to create arrangements based on favorite flowers or color preferences.

"We help guests customize all the time," says Menton's Maura Lacy, who's fielded requests such as finding the bottle of Champagne a couple drank at their wedding and creating signature cocktails for an occasion. "The sky's the limit. We really try to accommodate anything we possibly can given the resources that we have."

Custom flower arrangements, personalized menus and caviar courses are also popular options at L'Espalier, where beverage director Lauren Daddona creates pairings for each of the 12 courses served at the chef's table. But she had to get creative with a special request from one group of diners who wanted to avoid wine altogether: "It was a challenge to figure out 12 different beverages to match the courses from the kitchen, but it allowed us to be super creative and it was very fun for all."

The L'Espalier team draws upon that creativity each night as they transform a pastry prep area in the middle of the kitchen into the chef's table. Light fixtures are swapped to provide a more gentle glow, an elevated table top is moved in to cover the counter, linens are ironed, and the table is set with plates used exclusively at the chef's table, which seats up to four. The team even brings in a portable air conditioner to keep guests comfortable, since they sit close enough to the chefs to feel the heat.

"You are right in the action. You couldn't be closer to the action," says L'Espalier maître d' and fromager Louis Risoli. "People are really impressed watching the coordination that goes on in the kitchen. The kitchen is almost balletic."

And while he calls the kitchen's atmosphere "fairly calm," guests may also be privy to a rare boisterous or tense moment—not that Risoli thinks they mind. "Because everyone's seen that on TV, I think a lot of people are secretly hoping that'll happen," he says. "It's a show no matter what."

That's likely part of the reason the table is booked nearly every night. Some guests come back time and time again; one couple has dined at the table more than 20 times. "They celebrate their birthdays and their anniversaries there, and they bring in friends. Someone's visiting them, that's where they go," Risoli says. "It's wonderful because we become friends." Chef/proprietor Frank McClelland recalls one group of diners who were so friendly, they asked to help clean up afterward. Ever the hospitable hosts, the L'Espalier team obliged.

"People are really impressed watching the coordination that goes on in the kitchen. The kitchen is almost balletic."

Though his chef's tables are set just outside his open kitchens, chef/owner Michael Scelfo of Alden & Harlow and Waypoint aims to get to know guests on that same personal level. "I want people to feel like part of our family," he says, noting they have a prime view of food as it leaves the adjacent chef's pass. "I often talk to the chef's table guests about the food as it goes out, even if it's not theirs." As for their meals, diners at Alden & Harlow's six-top and Waypoint's four-top can order from the menu or let the kitchen whip up something off-menu based on their preferences. "We love to have fun with the menus," Scelfo says. "Recently, we made one of our chef's table guests a birthday dessert of crispy pork belly with a candle in it."

Not that you need to be marking a milestone to pull up a front-row seat. "We see engagements happen pretty frequently," Scelfo says, "but overall we love the idea of celebrating every day—no occasion necessary." ◆

NOT-SO-FREE RIDES

BY EZRA DYER

1 THE CIGARETTE RACING 41' GTR

3 THE AMERICAN COACH AMERICAN EAGLE

4 THE SABERTOOTH WILDCAT

In the course of my job, I regularly peek into the lifestyles of people with massive disposable income—you know, the people who fly their Ferraris over to China for a track day, or who nonchalantly bought two 50-inch plasma TVs back when that was a $40,000 investment. As such, I've developed a well-honed sense of which luxury baubles I'll require should I suddenly acquire the means to buy my own island (and not one that's some dumb frozen rock in Maine—I mean a cool Richard Branson one). Specifically, I know which machines I'll be cramming into my aircraft hangar. And they're not cars.

Sure, cars can be luxurious. But I've driven everything, and the difference between a $2 million Bugatti and a $20,000 Golf is simply a matter of degree. Either way, it's a car, and you won't get very far if you drive it into a lake. (Which, a few years back, one Bugatti driver famously learned firsthand. It's OK; I'll wait while you go to YouTube.) Now, an Argo 8x8? That thing can plunge into a lake and keep right on going. And that's what luxury really means—attaining the ability, Iron Man-style, to do things that you have no business doing. Like riding a jet board. Or crushing a car with a tank. Or taking off from the East River and soaring above the gridlock outside Manhattan on your way out to Montauk. With that in mind, here are 10 luxury machines to make you glad you bought that Powerball ticket all by yourself and not with your dumb co-workers.

1. THE CIGARETTE RACING 41' GTR

Up in Maine, the Pemaquid lobster boat races include a class called "fastest lobster boat afloat." I've always wanted to go up there with a boat that clearly violates the spirit of the rules, a Miami go-fast with a trap hauler strapped to the side to render it a "lobster boat." Well, Cigarette now makes center-console fishing boats that could actually haul a fair load of traps, if you were demented enough to have a sternman onboard instead of the standard-issue bikini ladies. Out of Biscayne Bay, I helmed a new 41' GTR—equipped with four 400-horsepower Mercury Racing outboards and slated for delivery to the Sultan of Johor—that maxed out at about 80 mph, which would definitely be enough to take the checkered flag in Pemaquid. But since money is no object, I might go for the new SD GT3, which packs 1,110-horsepower twin-turbo V8s. I drove that one, too, but did not max it out, because that boat just set the center-console speed record at 104 mph. Just think of how fresh those lobsters would be.

2. THE ARGO AVENGER 8X8 LX

The Argo isn't particularly fast (top speed: about 25 mph), but it is unstoppable. With eight-wheel drive and a watertight hull, the Argo can drive right into a lake and, churning its octet of paddle tires, swim to the other side. It's just the thing for upscale duck hunters or people with moats. There's a stereo and a USB jack, so you can rock out and charge your phone while fording the Swan Pond, but beware that you're limited to about 4 mph in the water. So if you drop into a current that's flowing faster than that, you'd better have a plan for crawling out downstream. However, if you intend to heckle the scullers out on the Charles, you can also fit an outboard to the back to add some giddyup in aquatic mode. It's like having your own duck boat, minus the chipper narration.

3. THE AMERICAN COACH AMERICAN EAGLE

Once I can afford a $700,000 RV, I'll also be hiring someone to drive it. Because, as you might imagine, there's a little bit of a learning curve when you jump behind the wheel of a 45-foot behemoth like this. Oh, she cruises down the highway with the greatest of ease. But parking will cause you to develop hypertension and possibly break out in hives. Once you're set up, though, you'll conclude that this is the way road-tripping should be done. The sides of the living room power out, as does the bedroom, transforming the Eagle from a road-going dreadnaught to a very nice one-bedroom, one-and-a-half-bath apartment. You've got a full granite-and-stainless-steel kitchen, a tiled shower with a skylight and TVs everywhere (including outside, for tailgating). There's even a washer and dryer and, should your travels take you off the grid, a generator tucked in the nose, where its noise won't disturb your slumber way back yonder in the master suite.

4. THE SABERTOOTH WILDCAT

Many a motorcyclist subscribes to the notion that no bike is ever powerful enough. These people are insane, because a Vespa is powerful enough. Nonetheless, Sabertooth builds motorcycles that are essentially giant car engines with handlebars. I rode one, the WildCat, in the Blue Hills a few years back, and it remains one of the least-serene trips to the Blue Hills that anyone's experienced. The WildCat is 350 horsepower with a seat, and it's just the starting point—you can get bigger engines and turbos. And why not? You're not getting life insurance anymore anyway. I can't claim that I fully exercised the WildCat, but its defining trait is a disjunction between speed and the apparent work exerted by the machine. On a Ducati, a rip from 40 mph to 70 mph would be accompanied by a frantic high-rpm bellow. On the WildCat, you zap yourself to outrageous speeds without the bike sounding like it's even trying. Because it's not. Sometimes you need to really test your own mettle, and taking a ride on one of these is way easier than base-jumping from the edge of space.

5. THE UNICAT

7 THE ZAPATA RACING FLYBOARD

Nobody knows. But with a Unicat you can find out. The idea is, deliver yacht-like living quarters atop a truck that you can drive across the Sahara desert. Dinner with the Maasai? That's happened during a Unicat trek. These days, the company bases its trucks on European chassis, but the one I drove outside Vegas was built on an International 4x4 of the type that National Grid would use to access some wicked remote power lines. But instead of a bucket on the back, it had a cabin outfitted with marine-grade equipment, like cabinets that stay closed even when you're tilted at a crazy angle. Think of the possibilities, like flyboarding with the Maasai. Or you could just park it on Newbury Street. What are they gonna do, tow you?

6. TANKS

Yes, you're allowed to own tanks. I mean, it makes sense: It's just a bulldozer with a gun on it, and you could make one of those yourself if you wanted. I have it on good authority that a gentleman in the Metro West area has quite an arsenal of tracked military vehicles, but the tanks I drove were out in Minnesota at a place imaginatively named Drive A Tank. After acclimating myself with a cheerful little tank, an Abbot (technically a piece of self-propelled artillery, but your neighbors won't know the difference), I graduated to the real deal, a 60-ton British Chieftain main battle tank. Peering out through the hatch, I lined up a white Chevy Malibu and hit the throttle. I can tell you definitively that a Malibu is no match for a Chieftain, although you want to stop before you're all the way across because the smooshed car will ride up around the back and, I don't know, scratch your tank.

7. THE ZAPATA RACING FLYBOARD, AKA JET BOOTS

Until we all have our own drone jetpacks (which might be sooner than we think), the Flyboard is the best way to soar boldly into the grand tomorrow. Or, more likely, to plunge headfirst into the imperfect today. By which I mean, it takes a little while to develop your Flyboard skills. The device itself is basically a wakeboard attached to a fire hose and equipped with water nozzles on either end. The other end of the hose is connected to a personal watercraft (oh yes, you'll need a Sea-Doo, Jet Ski or the like), its thrust redirected to the Flyboard nozzles. As the rider on the Jet Ski hits the throttle (or you do, with a remote control), water shoots down from the nozzles and you shoot skyward. Once you get your balance, you can ride around carving turns in the sky, flipping loops or just hovering 20 feet above the water like a total boss. The Flyboard starts at around $4,500, but you can also find places that rent them and offer lessons. Take the lessons.

8. THE CESSNA CARAVAN AMPHIBIAN

I did not, technically, fly the Caravan out of the East River, bank over the Williamsburg Bridge and set a course for Montauk while gazing down at the clogged artery of the Long Island Expressway. But I was sitting in the co-pilot's seat, with the yoke in front of me, looking over at the pilot and hoping that he'd had a recent physical and wasn't having a bad day of any sort. Fortunately, he was fine, which gave me time to contemplate the awesomeness of a seaplane. There we were, amid some of the suckiest traffic on the East Coast, and none of that was relevant. The river was our runway, and a drive that takes more than two hours (under ideal circumstances) was dispatched in about 40 minutes. Now, is it unnerving to see an oar mounted on an airplane? Definitely. Did I think we were going to crash into Brooklyn at 80 mph at an altitude of six inches? Sure. But we didn't, so now I want a seaplane. I know of one fellow who bought one because he has a dock and his neighborhood banned helicopters. Take that, HOA!

9. THE CAN-AM MAVERICK X3 X RS

Since my Powerball plans will undoubtedly involve purchasing a swath of land the size of Wyoming (or perhaps actually Wyoming), I'll need a vehicle capable of traversing unpaved terrain at high speeds. And right now, the X3—dreamt up by our northern neighbors at BRP in Quebec—is the closest thing to an off-the-shelf race buggy. It's got two feet of suspension travel and a turbocharged triple-cylinder engine, a combo that allowed me to truly terrify myself down in Baja a few months back. Behind the wheel of the X3, you just get used to driving Mach 8 over everything. For instance, imagine traffic on I-90 backed up so bad that every car was touching every other car. Now imagine driving over the top of that mess at 60 mph. OK, I don't think you could really do that in an X3. But I'm not 100 percent sure you couldn't.

10. THE POLARIS SLINGSHOT

Nothing says "I'm rich and don't care who knows it" quite like a three-wheeled, open-cockpit two-seater that looks like Dark Knight fan fiction on wheels. The funny thing is, the outrageous Slingshot doesn't actually cost that much, with a base price in line with that of a sensible Honda Accord. With a modest GM four-cylinder under the hood, the Slingshot isn't actually that fast, but going fast isn't the point. The point is to make everyone look at you, all the time. This thing gets more attention than a Lamborghini, but since it's technically a motorcycle (three wheels!), you're supposed to wear a helmet when you drive it. Which means that, like Batman, you'll retain your anonymity. At least until you cross the New Hampshire border.

DIYuletide

Get gifting at an indie craft fair.

ANOTHER PINE TREE-scented candle? Sometimes holiday gifting is a real bust. But that's a good thing at the Bust Craftacular, a craft fair hosted by the alt-women's magazine. Now in its 11th year, the Craftacular features more than 100 vendors selling handmade and vintage wares, from leather goods to pop culture pins to hand-printed greeting cards. Come to shop but stay to party: There'll be DJs, an ugly sweater photo booth, free nail art, flower crown making, cocktails, food and Artisan's Asylum jewelry- and map-making workshops, plus Broken Tail Rescue's Cat Cafe, where all the kitties are up for adoption. The first 300 attendees will score a swag bag, so come early when the Craftacular hits the BCA Cyclorama on Dec. 17 and 18. / Alexandra Cavallo

The Bust Craftacular runs Dec. 17-18 from 11 am to 6 pm at the BCA Cyclorama, 539 Tremont St., Boston. $3. bust.com/boston-bust-craftacular-boston.html

Local dance titan Tony Williams' Urban Nutcracker reinvigorates Tchaikovsky's beloved holiday ballet, placing the action in downtown Boston, where young Clarice discovers an enchanted world on Christmas Eve. The multicultural performance melds Tchaikovsky's original score with the music of Duke Ellington, retelling the story through a mix of hip-hop, jazz, tap, flamenco and—new this year—traditional Georgian folk dance by Giorgi & Giorgi, choreographers with Boston's Mavi Dance, a company dedicated to reviving ancient dance traditions. INTO THE WILD Just a month after the premiere of his cult TV classic Twin Peaks, director David Lynch won the Palme d'Or—and divided critics—with 1990's Wild at Heart, a black comedy/romance/thriller peppered with nods to both Elvis and The Wizard of Oz. Nicolas Cage and Laura Dern star as a couple crossing the country, but this is no average road trip: He's breaking parole, and her overprotective mother (played by Diane Ladd, Dern's mom IRL) has hired a gangster to take him out. Take a walk on the wild side at the MFA, where the film screens as part of a Laura Dern retrospective on Dec. 16, 18 and 21. / Shivani Patel

Allied ★★★ It begins in Casablanca and ends on a runway, but director Robert Zemeckis hasn't quite matched Michael Curtiz's wartime classic starring Humphrey Bogart and Ingrid Bergman. It's not for a lack of trying. In Brad Pitt and Marion Cotillard, Zemeckis has cast two of the hottest stars onscreen, though they don't quite smolder. But how could they? Despite a game script by Steven Knight (writer of 2007's Eastern Promises), Zemeckis has typically been a cold filmmaker. Which isn't to say that he hasn't made some hugely enjoyable pictures (Back to the Future or Forrest Gump, anyone?), but he's always been better at employing the latest technology than presenting real human emotion—and with this espionage picture that opens in 1942, he's using every trick in his digital toy box, including an ill-advised decision to de-age Pitt. He plays Max Vatan, a Canadian intelligence officer who falls for Marianne Beauséjour (Cotillard), the French Resistance fighter who poses as his wife in North Africa. Skipping ahead a couple of years, the two have married for real and started a family in London. Alas, mom might also be a Nazi spy. If only we could better feel the tensions this might create at the dinner table. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Arrival ★★1/2 When I first heard the strong word-of-mouth buzz about this science-fiction film from Denis Villeneuve (director of Prisoners, Sicario and the forthcoming Blade Runner sequel), I should have paid heed to the name of the picture's screenwriter: Eric Heisserer, the scribe behind Final Destination 5 and the misbegotten reboots of A Nightmare on Elm Street and The Thing. Though Heisserer is working with someone else's tale (Ted Chiang's Nebula Award-winning short story "Story of Your Life"), the thought-provoking ideas in his script begin to collapse the more you think about them. Nevertheless, while the spell lasts, Villeneuve (aided immeasurably by his longtime collaborator, composer Jóhann Jóhannsson) presents a compelling drama as linguistics expert Louise Banks (Amy Adams) and theoretical physicist Ian Donnelly (Jeremy Renner) race to communicate with the mysterious alien lifeforms aboard massive UFOs that suddenly appear around the planet. Also hindered by visuals that are too ambitious for its modest budget, the film is a noble, flawed effort. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Doctor Strange ★★★ If you enjoyed the trippy Quantum Realm in the climax of 2015's Ant-Man, you ain't seen nothing yet: Director Scott Derrickson and his army of talented visual effects artists have conjured a mind-bending multiverse for this origin story. It follows world-famous neurosurgeon Stephen Strange (Benedict Cumberbatch), whose hands have become shakier than the British Cumberbatch's American patois after a horrific car accident. Having exhausted every medical option in his attempts to heal, Strange travels to an arcane enclave hidden within Kathmandu, where martial-arts practitioner Baron Mordo (Chiwetel Ejiofor) saves the good doctor from further injury at the hands of thugs before introducing him to the Ancient One (Oscar winner Tilda Swinton), the bald-headed leader of a clan of magic-wielding monks who teaches our hero the art of sorcery. While Marvel's latest film may seem like a retread of Iron Man's original adventure—especially once Strange adopts a goatee to go along with his massive ego and self-deprecating jokes—the dazzling visuals help make up for a familiar story. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Edge of Seventeen ★★★1/2 I wouldn't have guessed that this delicate comic drama marks the directorial debut of its writer/director, Kelly Fremon Craig, who has only one previous writing credit to her name (Post Grad, a 2009 comedy starring Michael Keaton and Alexis Bledel), but the guiding hand of producer James L. Brooks—the Academy Award winner behind classics such as Terms of Endearment, Broadcast News and As Good as It Gets—is visible in nearly every frame. Craig's character-driven charmer focuses on gawky high school junior Nadine (Hailee Steinfeld in a rich, heartbreaking performance), whose life is disrupted when her lone friend, Krista (Haley Lu Richardson), begins dating her "perfect" all-star older brother Darian (Blake Jenner). With her beloved father (Eric Keenleyside) dead and her relationship with her mother (Kyra Sedgwick) fractured, Nadine turns to her dry-witted history teacher (MVP Woody Harrelson), who becomes her sounding board and mentor, advising her though some of the awkward episodes that earned the film its R rating. See it with your daughter—if she's not too embarrassed to go with you. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Fantastic Beasts and Where to Find Them ★★1/2 Director David Yates, who helmed the final four Harry Potter adaptations, returns to the "Wizarding World" of author J.K. Rowling for this spinoff. And once you hear the first few notes borrowed from composer John Williams' Potter theme play under the title card, there's no denying we're back in familiar territory—even if this new tale is set during an earlier era, on the opposite side of the Atlantic and starring a British hero only hinted at in an earlier picture. It's 1926 in New York, and Newt Scamander (Oscar winner Eddie Redmayne) is fresh off a boat, carrying a rather special portmanteau that doubles as a portal to the makeshift zoo he maintains for his menagerie of fantastic beasts. Naturally, some get loose, unleashing enough visual effects overkill to fill four sequels. Conveniently enough, a quartet of follow-ups have already been announced, all of which will be scripted by Rowling, who makes a shaky screenwriting debut in this film. Now that her world-building is done, let's hope she allows her characters—including wand-wielding sisters Porpentina (Katherine Waterston) and Queenie Goldstein (Alison Sudol) and Jacob Kowalski (Dan Fogler), the No-Maj (American for Muggle) who gets swept up in the adventure—more room to create beautiful magic together. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Jackie ★★★★ Few films will disorient you as much as Pablo Larraín's biopic of Jacqueline Bouvier Kennedy, and a lot of the credit belongs to the exceptional score by Mica Levi, the talented avant-garde composer who lent an equal sense of unease to Jonathan Glazer's Under the Skin three years ago. Her music is just as much of a character as the first lady herself, who's portrayed in this remarkable film from Chile's Larraín (director of another current biopic, Neruda) by Academy Award winner Natalie Portman in a stunning turn that would be easy to dismiss as a simple, mannered caricature—if the real Jackie O hadn't been so studied and practiced herself. After all, wasn't she also playing a very public role as the president's wife? Which isn't to say that she didn't love her husband Jack, who's played in brief flashbacks by Caspar Phillipson, a Dane with an uncanny resemblance to JFK. Not nearly as strong a visual match but nevertheless perfect for his role is Peter Sarsgaard as Jack's brother Bobby, who becomes Jackie's fiercest protector in the week after the president's brutal assassination. And cinematographer Stéphane Fontaine's grainy 16 mm footage brilliantly evokes those cold November days in 1963. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Loving ★★★ After venturing into science fiction with this spring's uneven Midnight Special, writer/director Jeff Nichols reunites a number of players from that film's cast for an earth-bound drama more in line with his previous character studies, 2007's Shotgun Stories, 2011's Take Shelter and 2012's Mud. Arkansas native Nichols knows the South—and its deeply-rooted racist past—which serves him well as he dramatizes the courage and commitment of Richard and Mildred Loving (Joel Edgerton and Ruth Negga), an interracial couple who fought a nearly decadelong battle for the right to live with their children as a family in their home state of Virginia. Their civil-rights case went all the way to the Supreme Court, bringing to an end anti-miscegenation laws in 1967, reaffirming not only the Lovings' right to marry, but solidifying the foundation of marriage for all who followed in their footsteps. Eschewing manufactured drama, Nichols celebrates the quiet dignity of his subjects. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Manchester by the Sea ★★★★ Set and shot in the Cape Ann region of northern Massachusetts, writer/director Kenneth Lonergan's third consecutive masterpiece is the incredibly sad story of a loner whose life has been decimated by a single late-night moment of bad judgment. So I was surprised by how much a movie so unflinching in its observations about death and its effect on the living could make me laugh. A good deal of the humor comes from the lived-in, naturalistic interactions between Lee Chandler (Casey Affleck) and his 16-year-old nephew, Patrick (Lucas Hedges, impressing after small roles in Wes Anderson's Moonrise Kingdom and The Grand Budapest Hotel). After the death of his older brother Joe (Kyle Chandler), Lee learns that he's been made the sole guardian of Patrick, forcing the Quincy-based janitor to reluctantly return to Manchester-by-the-Sea, where he'll also revisit the devastating event that tore apart his marriage to Randi (Michelle Williams, who will shatter you in her small but integral role). Lonergan is extraordinarily attuned to the way people talk, mining both pathos and humor from his peerless dialogue. But Manchester by the Sea, one of the richest dramas of this year or any other, is also about what the characters can't say to one another—and how the silences separate them. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Miss Sloane ★★ This latest drama from Shakespeare in Love director John Madden is clearly being released into theaters with an eye toward the Oscars. It's topical, taking on the Second Amendment, the gun lobby and the D.C. swamp-dwellers who stand to profit from an emotionally charged topic. It also stars Jessica Chastain in an award-ready role as the smart, tough-as-nails and deeply principled career woman Elizabeth Sloane. Her high-powered lobbyist isn't too far removed from her role in Kathryn Bigelow's Zero Dark Thirty as the CIA analyst who'd stop at nothing until she found Osama bin Laden. Ah, but that 2012 drama had something Miss Sloane doesn't: Mark Boal's crackling script, which kept the fictionalized tale charged, without resorting to the ridiculous theatrics and late-film twist that Jonathan Perera employs here. The first-time screenwriter has obviously studied the work of Aaron Sorkin, borrowing much of the speechmaking and theatrics that are hallmarks of the Oscar winner's work on films like The Social Network, but Perera mistakes quantity for quality; you can practically see each actor (including Sam Waterston and Alison Pill, two cast members from Sorkin's The Newsroom) teeing up to have their self-righteous, same-sounding say. Some viewers are bound to mistake the film's topicality for profundity, but don't be fooled. For a movie reliant on the hot-button topic of guns, it wildly overshoots. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

MOANA ★★★1/2 With Pixar boss John Lasseter now overseeing production for the classic Disney Animation label, some may mourn the death of the hand-drawn animation seen in the likes of The Little Mermaid and Aladdin as traditional animation directors make the switch from ink and paint to CG. Nevertheless, the filmmaking team behind those classics, Ron Clements and John Musker, are off to a sterling start with this action-packed fable, which is co-directed by Don Hall and Chris Williams, the duo behind Big Hero 6. This tale of an adventurous teenager hits huge emotional highs, backed by toe-tapping songs from Lin-Manuel Miranda (the musical genius behind Broadway's Hamilton), Grammy-winning composer Mark Mancina and Opetaia Foa'i, lead singer of world music band Te Vaka. It has Moana (voiced by 16-year-old newcomer Auli'i Cravalho) sailing off on a heroic mission to save her people with some help from once-mighty demigod Maui (Dwayne Johnson). While the story may be familiar, in a refreshing break from the norm, Disney's newest princess sets sail without the prospect of a prince awaiting her on the horizon. Ah, progress. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Moonlight ★★★★ Writer/director Barry Jenkins' sophomore film is a powerfully acted drama spread across three distinct acts, all focused on the same character, seen first as a child (Alex R. Hibbert), then as a teen (Ashton Sanders) and at last as an adult (Trevante Rhodes). Each chapter would stand as a strong short film if viewed independently, but the cumulative effect might just blindside you. Jenkins introduces us to Little (Hibbert) when he's a poor black youth living in a Miami housing project. Gradually, a local drug dealer named Juan (Mahershala Ali) and his girlfriend Teresa (R&B singer Janelle Monáe) become surrogate parents to Little. This doesn't sit well with Paula (Naomie Harris), Little's single mother, an addict who's hooked on the junk that Juan peddles. Sadly, she can't help taking out the resentment she feels toward Juan and Teresa on her quiet, "different" child. Exactly how different, we discover when Little breaks his usual silence to ask Juan, "What's a faggot?" Calmly and without judgment, Juan explains, "It's a word people use to make gay people feel bad." The boy then inquires, "Am I a faggot?" Juan warmly replies, "You might be gay, but you're not a faggot.... You gotta decide for yourself who you wanna be." By the final third, as our no-longer-little hero drives toward an oceanside date with fate, he not only embraces who he is, but the boy finally becomes a man. Bring tissues. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

MUSIC

Edited by Alexandra Cavallo

LONG WAY UP Cambridge-born rapper Sammy Adams first earned props in 2009 with a remix of Asher Roth's chart-topping bro-rap single "I Love College" that he cheekily dubbed "I Hate College," appropriately recorded in a makeshift studio in his Trinity College dorm room. Adams then released his first EP, Boston's Boy, in early 2010, garnering a loyal college fan base, and followed up with the 2013 EP Homecoming. But it wasn't until March that he released his aptly named debut studio album, The Long Way, which is marked by the same "hip-pop" beats but finds Adams graduating to a more mature lyrical flow. Welcome home Adams—who's featured on fellow Boston rapper Rapta's just-dropped "Brady," which shouts out another of Boston's favorite boys—when he hits the House of Blues on Dec. 27. / Jacqueline Weiss

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Sarah Hagman

STARS AND GRIPES Worcester Art Museum flagged 65 works from its collection for Picket Fence to Picket Line, an exhibit tracing the ever-evolving idea of what it means to be an American citizen. James Karales' iconic image of civil rights marchers en route to Montgomery from Selma, Alabama, joins The First Patriotic Election in the Beach Street Industrial School (pictured above), Jacob August Riis' 1888 photograph of young immigrants casting votes on whether to salute the flag. In addition to silkscreens from Andy Warhol and prints from the Occupy Wall Street movement—all on display through Feb. 5—you'll also find The Beauty of Tyranny, a newly commissioned multimedia installation by Seoul-based duo Young-hae Chang Heavy Industries. It's on view through Dec. 31 next to the work that inspired it, photography pioneer Alfred Stieglitz's turn-of-the-century image The Steerage. / Sarah Hagman

TRUE COLORS

Before they were leading charges against the British and attempting to establish a U.S. Constitution, American revolutionaries Samuel Adams, Paul Revere and John Hancock had their portraits painted by John Singleton Copley. The prolific Boston-born artist is still revered throughout the city, and the MFA houses the world's largest collection of his works. But as Harvard professor Jane Kamensky explores in A Revolution in Color: The World of John Singleton Copley, the artist felt a stronger allegiance to England, packing up and moving across the pond to begin the British chapter of his career before America declared its independence. Brush up on your art history when Kamensky stops by Harvard Book Store for a discussion on Dec. 14. / Meghan Kavanaugh

EAT, DRINK AND BE FABULOUS

Who doesn't enjoy a good Fete of Food and Wine? And if it raises money for the Crohn's and Colitis Foundation, all the better.

The elegant evening, held at the Four Seasons, began with Champagne and cocktails served alongside light bites in the Governor's Room and continued with a round-the-world smorgasbord in the ballroom, with buffets serving everything from burgers, lobster rolls and fried chicken to sushi, pasta and Chinese.

Spotted tying on the feedbag: honorees Dr. Neal LeLeiko and real estate mogul Raanan Katz, gorgeous blond Brit Emma Callus, investment guru Robert Whitc with the naturally carbonated Meg Miller, brunette beauty Jennifer Poveromo, corkscrew-curled cutie Claudine Blake and her handsome other half, Christopher, dashing developer Arthur Winn, mega-philanthropist Teddy Cutler and former Patriot Matt Light, who threatened, "If we don't make a lot of money on this auction, the Pats will lose this weekend."

The evening's choicest comment: "May having your stylist send you too many photos of dresses be the worst thing that ever happens to you."

KIDDING AROUND

"I wonder what's for dinner," was one of the predictably corny comments overheard during the cocktail hour at the Wonder Ball, a black-tie benefit for the Boston Children's Museum.

As it turned out, the answer was short ribs, and they were absolutely delicious, as was everything else at the uber-fun and wildly fashionable soiree. Front and center were co-chairs Julie and Phil Gordon, Aisha Al Riyami and Al Wadhah Al Adawi, and Eve and Jonathan Rounds, party pair Ashley and Paul Bernon, stunning blonde Vanessa Kerry and her handsome other half, Brian Nahed, fashion plate Ellie Chu, Beacon Hillions Peter and Liz Georgantas, do-gooders Rachel and Adam Hirsch, book factory Ben Mezrich and his smoking-hot wife, Tonya, the ever elegant Rita Weiner and her debonair husband, Adam, gorgeous Ghanaian Cate Faddis, the intoxicating Uzo Erlingsson and one woman who said, "My definition of creative black tie is no bra and no undies."

"This is the Children's Museum, so let's act like it!" proclaimed one guest, and indeed, the crowd carried on until well past their bedtimes.

Meanwhile, the evening's funniest moment took place in the men's room, where one guest commented on the balsam fir-scented urinal cakes, saying, "It's beginning to smell a lot like Christmas."

ARS LONGA, PARTY BREVIS

There were plenty of bold-faced names at the Fenway Cultural District's FACES Gala, held in a rehearsal hall at Boston Conservatory.

On hand to honor Berklee president Roger Brown and Boston Conservatory president Richard Ortner were such arts boosters as BSO head honcho Mark Volpe, music lover Cynthia Curme, New England Conservatory rainmaker Janet Goff, the indefatigable Ted Landsmark, YMCA top dog Aaron Donahue, the absurdly handsome Cam Pierce, rapier wit and all-around dandy Philip Barash, his partner in crime, Erika Fritz, the ubiquitous Ann Heimlicher, real estate mack daddies Albert Lynch and Robert Weintraub, real estate mack mama Nicole Yoshikane, and so on and so forth.

The performances by students were stellar. The wine was a cut above the usual plonk. And the speaking program was blessedly brief. Overheard by the bar: "I feel I'm obligated to have a cultural experience at least once a fortnight."

"Does Netflix and chill count?"

MAMMA MIA!

The Friends of the Italian Cultural Center of Boston got a sneak peek at the new Eataly Boston a week before it opened at their annual fundraiser, Italianissimo!

Along with bragging rights came a feast that would have made any Sicilian nonna proud, with a selection of delicious dishes and gourmet goodies that had more than one guest loosening his belt a notch or two. Present and accounted for: honorees Federico Cortese of the Boston Youth Symphony Orchestras and MIT genius Silvio Micali, real estate developer Tony Pangaro, his legal eagle wife, Creelea, Italian Consul General Nicola De Santis and his physician wife, Lisa, the unsinkable Jan Saragoni, honorary Italian Emily Rooney, former first lady Angela Menino and her daughter, Susan Fenton, board member Lucille Spagnuolo, restaurateur extraordinaire Joe Milano of the Union Oyster House, A.R.T. dramaturge Ryan McKittrick, smoldering Venetian Franco Potepan and one woman who urged her husband, "Basta with the pasta."

The evening's funniest remark came from the woman who said, "What did I know back then? I didn't think you could get pregnant if the television was on...and the other person was asleep." ◆

CLEAN SLATES

THE DOORWAY TO A NEW YEAR seems to swing in both directions, and whether you find yourself looking back or looking ahead, we've got you covered. For one feature, I tap some forward-thinking local designers for ideas about what the Boston of tomorrow should look like (swimming pool in the Charles, anyone?). Matt Martinelli looks forward too, tuning into a new TV station launching on Jan. 1. Meanwhile, music critic Paul Robicheau rounds up his favorite albums and songs of 2016, sourcing sounds from a jazz veteran, a rap wunderkind, rock and R&B heavyweights and local dream-poppers. And Jonathan Soroff bridges past and present with a fascinating profile of a painter carrying on a century-old artistic tradition. He also chats with our cover subject, triple-threat talent and Brookline native Frankie Shaw, who has a big year ahead of her. Hope yours gets off to a great start too.

MAKING NEWS

NBC BOSTON IS SET TO SHAKE UP THE TV LINEUP.

Proud Peacocks

When the clock strikes midnight on Dec. 31, it'll be more than simply the start of a new year. It'll be the start of a new local TV station, with NBC Boston joining the fray as a fifth local TV station broadcasting in the Boston market.

The shakeup means WHDH (Ch. 7) will lose its NBC affiliation and become an all-Boston news station, while Fox, ABC and CBS affiliates will stay the same. But those looking for their daily dose of Lester Holt and Matt Lauer or their weekly fix of Saturday Night Live or This Is Us will have to tune into NBC Boston. The change will take effect on Jan. 1 after live coverage of the New Year's Eve festivities in Copley Square from 6 pm till 12:30 am on NECN and the Countdown NBC Boston channel.

Evening news anchors Phil Lipof and Shannon Mulaire are set to usher in the new station that night, and you might recognize both: Lipof previously worked at WCVB (Ch. 5) and Mulaire worked at WFXT (Ch. 25). They won't be the only familiar faces for local news viewers, as NBC Boston has spent the past year and a half stashing other on-air talent at sister station NECN before the big launch. We tapped a few of them to learn more about their new gigs. / Matt Martinelli

THIS JUST IN: NBC Boston joins the four existing local stations geared toward the Boston market.

SHANNON MULAIRE
Previous Station: WFXT (Ch. 25)
New Role: Weeknight anchor at 4, 6 and 11 pm
On the Challenges of a Brand-New Station: "The challenges are clear, but overwhelming. We don't have a built-in viewing audience that we've grown over decades. Starting from scratch is obviously a challenge. However, we have a team of people who have grown up in and worked in this market for decades, and that will help us hit the ground running."

PETE BOUCHARD
Previous Station: WHDH (Ch. 7)
New Role: Weeknight meteorologist at 4, 5, 6, 7 and 11 pm
On What He's Looking Forward to Most: "Sinking my teeth into the new weather toys around here: StormRanger mobile Doppler radar, our live truck, Weather Warrior, a whole new suite of weather graphics and even more surprises down the road. And with the largest staff of meteorologists in the Boston, it's all weather, all the time."

FRANK HOLLAND
Previous Station: WCVB (Ch. 5)
New Role: Weekend evening anchor
On Tapping into NBC Boston's Sister Station: "We are building something new, on top of a strong foundation. People know and love NECN. We are growing from that. We are also building the identity of this station every day. [NECN] already had great talent and staff, and now we are adding new people."

PHIL LIPOF
Previous Station: WCVB (Ch. 5)
New Role: Weeknight anchor at 6, 7 and 11 pm
On His Top Reason for Making the Move: "I was most looking forward to working again for [Kenny Plotnik, who previously worked as news director at WABC in New York], my old news director. . . We won't do 'breaking news' just to do it. We won't stay on longer than our competitors because we are worried about outlasting them. We will cover the communities we live in, in a responsible, professional way."

JOY LIM NAKRIN
Previous Station: WFXT (Ch. 25)

PUBLICO WORKS

A CONTINENT-HOPPING NEIGHBORHOOD SPOT SETS UP SHOP ON SOUTHIE'S FIRST STREET.

PUBLICO STREET BISTRO
11 Dorchester St., Boston. publicoboston.com

BUILDING BOOMS ARE OCCURRING all across the city, and Southie's First Street area is no different, with new condo buildings rising on many blocks, a new dog park recently opened and plans in the works to redevelop the old Boston Edison power plant. But a new eatery was missing from all the development—until now. Publico Street Bistro is set to open in January on the ground floor of the new Allure apartments.

"We're smack dab in the middle of the neighborhood, and we want all of our neighbors' support," says Theo Bougas, a co-owner with Jairo Dominguez and Teodora Bakardzhieva. "We want to be very inviting. We don't want to be too uptight. This was initially supposed to be a sports bar, and we're not that."

The three restaurant veterans tapped Keenan Langlois (formerly of the Sinclair) to helm the kitchen, which will turn out dishes with European and South American influences. Dishes such as steak tartare tacos or a crepe with a corn mousse will bridge the two continents; others such as tagliatelle Bolognese or a roasted chicken will adhere to a more traditional take. Langlois says less adventurous diners will still find a burger and a variety of pizzas on the menu, and there will also be a whole fried fish.

"I like to make food that is relatable to people and they can recognize it, and then they eat it and it either reminds them of stuff they've had in the past and it gives them a good feeling, or it gives them a new experience," Langlois says. "Every once in a while, we'll throw in stuff they've never had before, and once we earn that trust, we say, 'OK, now tried seared chicken livers,' or something like that. Then they say, 'OK, this guy's a good chef, let's try it.' And they say, 'OK, that's real good.'"

Publico—with a vibe described as mid-century meets rustic—is split into three distinct spaces. On the left side is a 60-seat dining area with a communal table in the center and several other tables surrounding it. A section by the 13-seat bar has four hightop tables near the full-length windows that will open during warmer weather. Speaking of, in the back of the restaurant but the center of the building is the 36-seat courtyard, which will have central hightop tables situated under a trellis, lounge sectionals along the sides and a bar along one wall.

Bakardzhieva heads up the beverage program, with 35 wines, nearly half available by the glass, as well as a simple cocktail list that will lean a little South American as she aims to educate customers on the finer points of pisco beyond pisco sours. Bartending is a shared background for Dominguez and Bougas as well, who have been friends since the '90s, when they both tended bar at Seth Greenberg's M-80. And they've been talking about opening a restaurant for years.

"He's my dearest friend. We always talked about it. And then this thing came around, and we said, 'Let's do this,'" Bougas says. "And here we are today."

HELL RAISER: The Automatic's version of a Frito pie packs some serious heat.

Good Eats: In the Bag

As an Arkansas boy who grew up eating Frito pies at a Dairy Freeze, The Automatic co-owner Dave Cagle knew the salty, savory snack could make for "great drinking food" for his Kendall Square joint that opened in November. "That's pretty much our theme here with the menu," echoes executive chef Ian Andreotta, "just pairing things that go well with a slight twinge of drunkenness." Served in a Frito-Lay bag, the spicy Frito Pie from Hell features Fritos topped with tender chunks of all-beef Texas chili, cheese, scallions and Inner Beauty Caribbean-style hot sauce made by co-owner Chris Schlesinger that brings notes of papaya and mango, plus some serious heat. For a little sweet relief from that heat, Cagle suggests pairing it with a frozen mudslide. / Meghan Kavanaugh

CLASS OF ITS OWN

Chianti Classico is among the world's most venerable wine regions, with a history dating to the medieval era. Its sangiovese-based red wines are chameleons, displaying a greater range of colorations than most of the world's other noble grape varieties. The best are wines of harmony, grace and power, with firm acidity but sufficient fruit to balance it. These attributes make Chianti Classico a quintessential food wine, and not simply to accompany beef or pasta. They are also adaptable to a wide range of well-seasoned poultry, fish and vegetarian dishes. These three all originate in different villages in the vast Chianti Classico subregion. / Sandy Block

VILLA NOZZOLE CHIANTI CLASSICO, 2014

From near Greve in the northern part of Classico, this is textbook Chianti: ripe, with tangy red cherry flavors, tobacco notes and hints of dried herbs and earth. This medium-bodied, elegantly styled wine incorporates 5 percent of merlot in the blend and is matured for 12 months in French oak casks. It's quaffable and works beautifully with lighter fare.

$22. Charles Street Liquors

ROCCA DELLA MACIE CHIANTI CLASSICO RISERVA, 2012

Located in the vicinity of Castellina in the region's south, Rocca delle Macie Riserva also has 5 percent of merlot, as well as an equal percentage of cabernet sauvignon. This wine is more ripe and has more floral scents, with moderate tannins and bold, smoky, spicy and tea leaf notes on the palate. Aged for two years in barrels, it is medium-full in body and goes great with grilled meats.

CASTELLO DI BOSSI "C. BERARDENGA" CHIANTI CLASSICO, 2012

Berardenga is situated in the warmest, southernmost part of the Chianti Classico area. Layered with rich black cherry flavors, it has savory, stony, mineral characteristics, with some of the woodsy, mushroom-like elements that make sangiovese so intriguing. This is a harmonious wine with great versatility for food, and it's very enjoyable with an herb-rubbed chicken breast.

$25. Wine Gallery, Brookline

Out of THE VAULT

25 YEARS

The Improper is coming to the close of our 25th anniversary year, and to properly mark the occasion, we've spent much of 2016 digging through the archives for gems from issues past. Behold, some bygone New Year's delights from, er, interesting resolutions to a guide to the technological apocalypse.

Dec. 18, 1991

For our Woman on the Street column, we polled passers-by with the question "What New Year's resolution are you most likely to break?" Said Carole, 27, of Medford (who no doubt no longer grapples with this particular vice), "To stop fantasizing about Bono every time I make love to my boyfriend." LOL.

Dec. 15, 1999

On the eve of Y2K (remember that??), we prepared our readers for the worst: namely, the end of days. In a cover story that perhaps hits a tad too close to home given how many folks are dreading what's in store for 2017, we ran down "The Improper's Guide to the End of the Universe." In reference to impending doom in 2000, we told our readers, "The media-hyped Y2K techno scare additionally casts an element of psychological anxiety because nobody really knows what will happen..." Well, at least that turned out OK?

Dec. 17, 2008

Flipping through this Year End issue's fashion spread made us do a double take, not because of the clothes, but because of the model: Kristen Kish, clad in cozy knits instead of chef's whites years before her big Top Chef win. Lately, the former chef de cuisine of Menton and Stir has been busy with photo shoots once again—namely ones for her debut cookbook, slated for publication in 2017.

PURVEYORS

IN SHEEP'S CLOTHING

When Genevieve Day opened her yarn and fabric shop JP Knit & Stitch six years ago, she was unsuccessful in her attempts to sell locally made wool to her knitters. "It didn't really take off," she says. But now that consumers have come to embrace and celebrate locally made products, "It's a whole different landscape," Day explains. "Knit local is a movement within the whole yarn industry." That shift has led to New England Farm to Fiber, Day's snug new 37-square-foot shop that opened in November at the Boston Public Market, selling single-heritage and blended wools from farms in Massachusetts, Vermont and New Hampshire, some of which even specify the name of the individual sheep right on the tag.

The shop also stocks knit kits from New England designers, notions and tote bags, plus a book of free patterns for single-skein projects. Swatches are available to show how various types of yarn will look when knit into different patterns, and Day can help shoppers select materials ideal for bulky sweaters or lace-knit hats, whether it's a soft wool from Cormo or Merino sheep or a heavy Shetland blend that's lightened up with the addition of goat mohair. "We're really focused on the unique qualities of specific sheep breeds," she says. "We love that they're local. These are sheep that are on farms an hour from Boston, and you can make beautiful, warm hand-knits for you or your loved ones." / Meghan Kavanaugh

KEEPING HOUSE

Melia Bensussen has been itching to take on A Doll's House for a long time. The Obie Award–winning director got that chance when the Huntington Theatre Company tapped her to direct Henrik Ibsen's oft-staged 1897 drama. We spoke with Bensussen, who serves as the chair of the performing arts department at Emerson College, about the new adaptation, which gets its American premiere at the BU Theatre Jan. 6–Feb. 5. / Alexandra Cavallo

THE IDEA OF A MAN NOT SEEING A WOMAN AS HIS EQUAL SEEMS RELEVANT NOW MORE THAN EVER... Yes! I mean, what is so terrifying about a woman's power, or a woman's intuition, that still disconcerts us?

DO YOU THINK THE PLAY SEEKS TO ANSWER THAT QUESTION, OR JUST POSES IT? That is a great question. I think it gives us much more interesting questions than it answers, but he [Ibsen] ... does give us a couple of alternatives. He doesn't paint a bleak picture. I think what he's saying fundamentally—and it is a question—is, can you get in touch with your own sense of what's right, your own sense of self, even when society is telling you you're wrong? And that, I think, is a particularly interesting message right now. Do we know what's right and wrong anymore? We're so divided now, and we vilify each other in this country. And there are no villains. Everybody's point of view has merit, and the question comes, how do you reconcile these points of view?

WHAT'S NEW TO THIS STAGING? This adaptation is much more direct. It has much less foreignness or frou-frou in the language. It aims to speak to us in a contemporary voice. ... I want it to not feel like, "Oh, those old people in those olden days." I think the danger with a play that's this good is that we freeze it as a classic, and we think that it's about other people and not about ourselves. And this production is immediate. It's an interracial cast. It's a young cast. They're fierce and they're passionate, and that's what this play needs to be.

LOOKING UP AND INWARD

A LOCAL AUTHOR'S DEBUT NOVEL EXPLORES THE HEALING POWER OF FRIENDSHIP.

Fill the Sky* by Katherine A. Sherbrooke
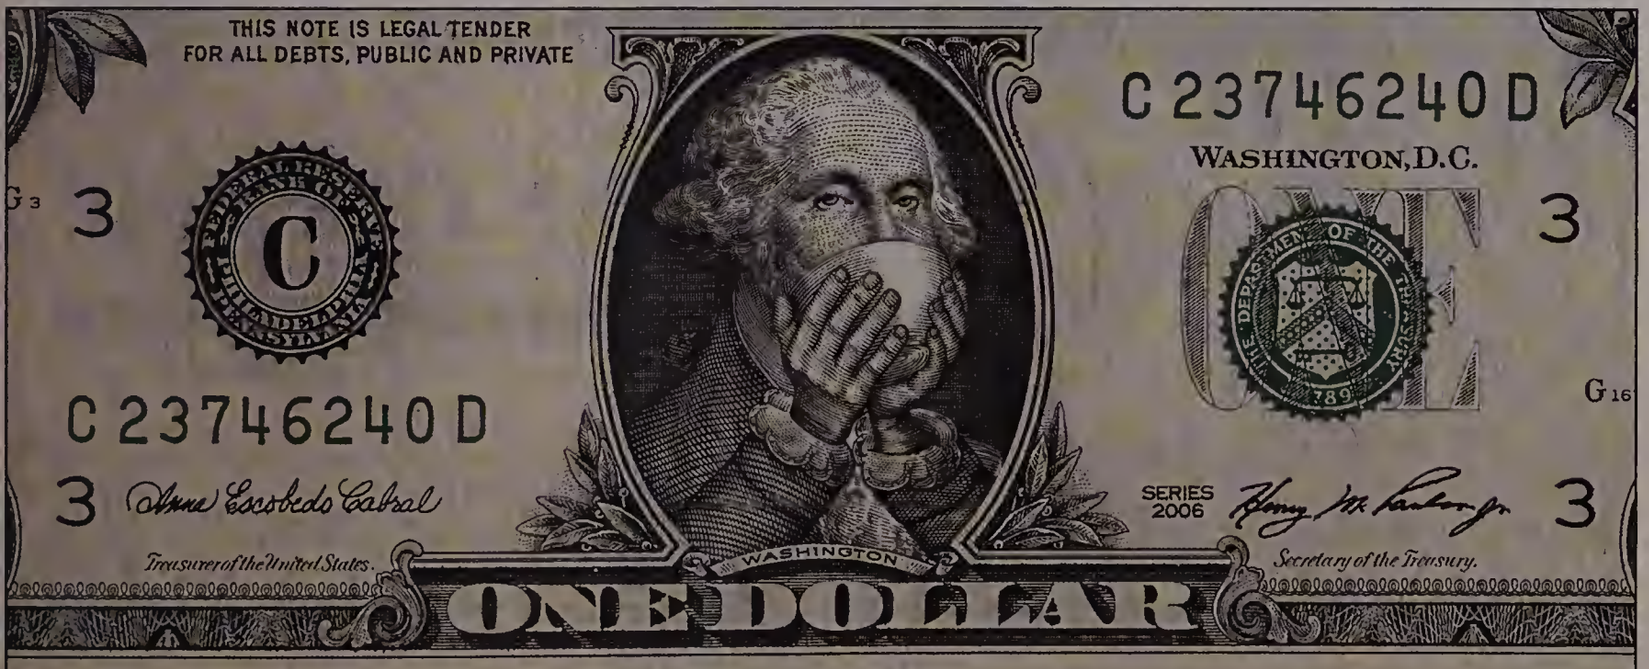
Published by SixOneSeven Books, 264 pages, $15



IN THIS DEBUT NOVEL, TESS AND JOLINE BRING their friend Ellie, who has cancer, to Ecuador to immerse her in shamanistic medicine, worlds away from chemo. The mystical treatments include medicine men rubbing eggs and guinea pigs on her body and spitting cologne at her. Inner blockages, not just Western medicine's tumors, are being explored—and lo, Ellie's heart, not her troubled lung, is the location of woe. A mother of three happily married to Joline's brother, Ellie connected with an old love while she was in remission. Now he's made his wily way to Ecuador, the cancer has returned, and Ellie is tormented with guilt.

Sherbrooke, who writes beautifully about nature, covers lots of territory: those exotic trancelike healings, friendships between women who chat girlishly while thinking deeply about their connections, the meanings surrounding illness and the complex teeterings of love. Tess, a biotech CEO, grapples with relationship worries, while Joline, a life coach and businesswoman, faces a moral dilemma—her colleague hopes to buy this sacred community and develop it in a crassly commercial way. Sherbrooke, herself a former entrepreneur, captures the language and ethos of that world so different from, but now adjacent to, a world of spirit and tradition and beauty.

Though Ellie came to Ecuador for medical reasons, the healing spirit there invites her down a long inner river that lands her at an emotionally positive place. Her friends also have romantic connections that end with satisfaction. This book of many themes gently rubs readers with a symbolic guinea pig, helping us contemplate love.

FROM PAGE 57: She was pulled back into the room by a vibration that enveloped her, like she was lying beneath a huge magnet tugging at every cell in her body. Her muscles unwound another notch and the pull became more localized, starting at her feet and traveling up toward her knees, to her belly button, over her ribs. Her skin tingled with a thousand tiny threads moving up through each pore. It was a pleasant sensation, like finally getting the water out of her ear after a long swim. ◆

KEEPIN' AUSTIN WEIRD: Texas' capital city is known for its dynamic music scene, but also offers lures for political buffs.

The Escape Artist / Lisë Stern

AUSTIN ALL THE WAY

FIND CAPITAL ENTERTAINMENT IN TEXAS' HIP CULTURAL ENCLAVE.

AUSTIN, TEXAS, BILLS ITSELF AS THE Live Music Capital of the World, a motto it adopted in 1991 after the late blues musician Lillian Stanfield proposed a slogan promoting Austin's music scene. It's a bold claim, but the town backs up the boast: Even the Austin-Bergstrom International Airport has five stages, and chances are you'll be accompanied by live music as you walk to baggage claim.

You might plan your trip around one of Austin's many music festivals, including South by Southwest in March, which started with 177 artists in 1987 and had a whopping 2,224 in 2016. April has the Urban Music Festival and the electronic fest Euphoria, among others. Another hot ticket: a taping of the PBS program Austin City Limits, which has been broadcasting shows here since 1975, featuring more than 500 musicians, starting with Willie Nelson. If you're feeling lucky, you can enter to win tickets to a taping—an entry form appears online about a week in advance—but you can also buy tickets for ACL Live at the Moody Theater throughout the year.

Austin has plenty of bars where you can listen to live music in the background while you schmooze and booze, but true music aficionados prefer "listening rooms" where people go to really hear the artists. The Cactus Cafe, located on the Austin campus of the University of Texas, is a great venue for full-on listening. The style leans toward folk but is eclectic, and performers have included Nanci Griffith, Hal Ketchum and the Dixie Chicks.

Dance halls are likewise part of the lifeblood of Austin's live music scene. The Broken Spoke has offered live music and Texas two-stepping since 1964. You get the sense no renovations have been made in 52 years as you pass through a dining room and a room labeled "Tourist Trap" on the way to the dance floor, a long space with a stage at one end that fills up with dancers of all ages. Neon beer signs abound, and the cowboy boots and 10-gallon hats are real.

SXSW (TOP) DENISE CHAMBERS BROKEN SPOKE KRISTEN MAUREL

Austin, of course, isn't just a musical capital, but the state capital—and the city that former Texas Gov. Rick Perry once called "the blueberry in the tomato soup" of the state. You can observe that political dynamic directly at Austin's capitol building, a must-see stop. The building was completed in 1888, and its dome rises 311 feet tall in a shade of pinkish tan, courtesy of a locally quarried granite called Sunset Red. Thanks to a 1993 underground extension, it's the country's largest state capitol. Wander on your own, aided by a brochure, or take a free guided tour, worthwhile for the tidbits of info about the decor, like the life-size statues of 19th-century rivals Stephen F. Austin and Sam Houston, carved by local sculptor Elisabet Ney and found in the south foyer, where tours start, and Henry Arthur McArdle's painting Dawn at the Alamo, which adorns the senate chamber.

Political buffs can also pay a visit to the Lyndon Baines Johnson Library and Museum (also known as the LBJ Presidential Library), a 10-story building on the UT Austin campus. Offering a comprehensive overview of Johnson's life, along with a history of the civil rights movement, it houses 45 million pages of documents and more than 54,000 objects, including the desk he used to sign the 1965 Voting Rights Act, a 7/8th scale exact replica of his oval office, complete with then state-of-the-art gadgets, and a life-size, joke-telling animatronic LBJ.

There are all kinds of dining options in Austin, including plenty of upscale restaurants. But the tacos are not to be missed. Torchy's Tacos is a local chain Michael Rypka started in a trailer in 2006; it's since grown to a dozen brick-and-mortar establishments in Austin, plus locations that stretch throughout Texas and into Colorado. "Living the damn good taco dream" is the company tagline, and well deserved. "Damn good!" is your first thought as you bite into these expertly created morsels, with fillings that include Baja shrimp, fried avocado and lamb, topped with fiery and flavorful house hot sauce (available to go, too).

And what's a great dessert after tacos? Ice cream, of course, and there's a Bay State connection at Amy's Ice Creams: Owner Amy Simmons worked at Steve's in Somerville in the 1980s while attending Tufts University. She brought the concept of smoosh-ins with her when she opened the first of 12 ice cream parlors in Austin—you choose a flavor and toppings, which a server smooshes and mixes on a slab counter. Scoopers at Amy's have perfected tricks, such as tossing a scoop of ice cream in the air and catching it in a cup behind their back. The stuff itself, available in seven basic flavors (Mexican Vanilla, Belgian Chocolate), plus a rotating roster of 350 others, is simply fabulous—and a sweet note on which to end a day's adventures. ◆

WOOD OVEN LOVE-IN

AREA FOUR DOES MUCH MORE THAN KILLER PIZZAS IN THE SOUTH END.

ANXIOUS TIMES CALL FOR RELIABLE comforts, whether the stress comes from Yuletide shopping or free-floating, tangerine-tinged apocalyptic anxiety. In such moments, the neighborhood bar/restaurant can be an essential refuge: a place to commiserate and cut loose with friends over pizza and brews. The new Area Four Boston is just such an oasis, though its ambiance, quality and prices reflect its setting in the South End's tony Troy complex. And despite the emphasis on thin-crust pizzas, it's a real restaurant, its gorgeous wood-fired oven bestowing charry flavor to serious dishes from around the Mediterranean.

Chef/co-owner Jeff Pond, who with partner Michael Krupp also operates Kendall Square's original Area Four, opens his menu with bar bites that include a refined take on mozzarella sticks in the form of batter-fried crispy cheddar and hot honey ($6), as well as sweet/hot escabeche pickles ($6) with lovely oven-charred Fresno chilies. These snacks segue into beautifully composed vegetable dishes that get more depth from wood fire than animal fats. Darkly gorgeous, ginger-spiked curried beluga lentils ($10) get cooling contrast from thick herb yogurt. Charcoal-roasted baby carrots ($11) are served with mizuna, a peppery, leafy Asian green, chunks of barely caramelized apples and a sticky-sweet pumpkin-seed brittle. Thick, creamy tahini ($11) is dotted with roasted cauliflower and chickpeas, a fabulous dip for herby oven-toasted pita wedges. Charred greens ($10) are gently dusted with savory za'atar and given lovely tartness with sumac yogurt: reductive yet stunning. Only wood-roasted Chinese long beans ($9) miss the mark, undone by underdoneness and overly salty miso vinaigrette.

The kiss of wood fire also gets applied to proteins like charred octopus ($21), blackened but still tender, with an unusually ocean-evocative, briny quality, gently complemented by green tahini and chickpeas. Brasa chicken ($24 half, $42 whole) is big, juicy and crisp-skinned, served with creamy little roasted potatoes, maitake mushrooms and the fine one-two of garlic cream and chicken jus. Fernet-braised short rib (charged $29, listed on the menu at $25) gains more sweetness than bitterness from its amaro bath, but it's a tender, thinly sliced, lean rendition of this perfect cold-weather dish, starchy heft provided by roasted root vegetables. Duck egg carbonara ($16) is another rare misfire, its buttery ribbon pasta weirdly crowned by a crunchy batter-coated duck egg. Trash fish and chips ($19) boasts a uniquely bubbly tempura coating (achieved with nitrogen infusion, like draft Guinness) and brilliant, crunchy potato wedges.

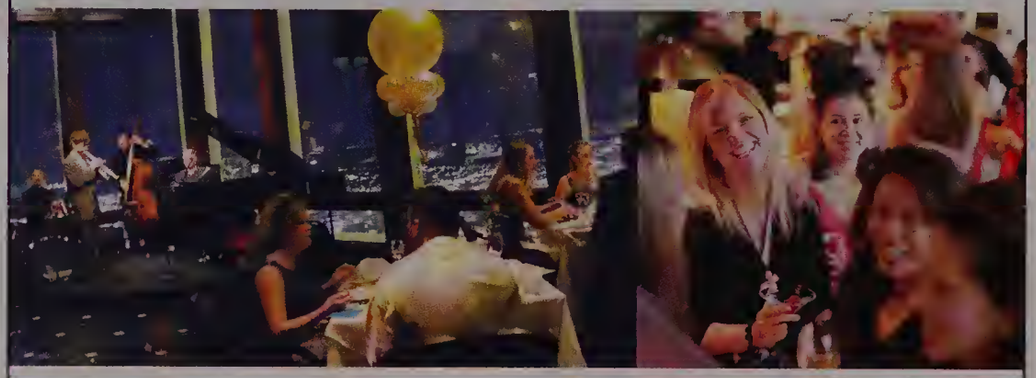
To the main event: pizza. Pond's long practice with lightning-quick cooking of long-fermented dough in very hot wood ovens yields spectacular Neapolitan-style results: uniform cooking, bubbly outer edges and just enough charring above and below. The Margherita ($13) with housemade mozzarella, tomato, pecorino and whole basil leaves could not be simpler or better. The Carnivore ($17.50) adds modest amounts of soppressata, sausage and bacon to this base, though the two-egg add-on ($4) would be better if the kitchen didn't deny us the joy of smearing the hot yolk around ourselves. The banh mi ($19) evokes the flavors of great Vietnamese sub sandwich with char siu pork belly, lightly pickled shredded carrots and daikon, cilantro and squiggled-on Sriracha aioli: delectable. The home run, though, is the Wellfleet clam and bacon ($17.50) with white clam sauce, pecorino, hot peppers and parsley. Loaded with briny, fresh-clam flavor, it's now the version to beat in Boston (sorry, New Haven invaders). The lone dessert is a complimentary serving of dark-chocolate pudding laced with sea salt and topped with crème fraîche.



Bar managers Augusto Lino and Dan Lynch have put together one of the South End's best beverage programs. Specialty cocktails ($11-$13, plus two draft highballs, $9) feature culinary accents or reincarnate ancient classics, as in the Improved Bourbon Cocktail ($13) of whiskey, maraschino, absinthe and bitters. The staff's serious chops show in their ability to whip up a bracing hot toddy ($11) or eggy amaro flip ($12) without batting an eyelash. Twenty-four wines, sherries and vermouths by the glass ($7-$16) are perfectly serviceable, as in the nicely acidic, mineraly, seafood-friendly 2015 Argyros "Atlantis" ($14), an assyrtiko blend from Santorini, and occasionally brilliant, as in the 2015 Domaine Ledogar Roug'é-Clair ($14) carignan/grenache blend from Languedoc, a novel clairet halfway between a red and a rosé: smooth, cherryish, lightly tannic, very pretty. The list of 38 bottles ($38-$142, most under $60) could use a few more pizza-friendly, cheap-and-cheerful reds like the 2014 Alvaro Castro "Dac Tinto" ($42), a touriga nacional blend from Dao, Portugal: light-bodied, peppery, a little earthy, not too extravagant for Tuesday night.

Craft-beer buffs will twinkle at the list of 14 draft beers and ciders ($7-$10), mostly from Massachusetts and New England, and another 14 packaged options ($7-$13) drawn from Massachusetts, California, Michigan, Belgium and Germany. (Pay mind to ABV: Many of these are sneakily potent.) The open room feels casually groovy: dim lighting, minimalist furnishings, two turntables at the host stand, a projection TV and comfortably raucous noise levels. Service is amiable and competent, hustling pizzas from pass to table, an essential skill with fast-cooling pies. Arriving at the tail-end of a 2016 that many Bostonians would rather forget, the second Arca Four can't solve the world's problems, but it sure is a cozy, tasty, hip-feeling spot to forget them a while. ◆

FESTIVE FETES

HIGHLIGHTS FROM HIGH SOCIETY

➜ After a matinee performance of The Nutcracker on Dec. 3, the holiday enchantment spread from the Opera House to the Ritz-Carlton for the annual Nutcracker Magic gala. More than 300 guests enjoyed a buffet dinner, children's activities and chances to meet some of the dancers they had just seen on stage. The festive event raised more than $320,000.

➜ In the beginning, "High Hopes" was an Oscar-winning song whose lyricist, Sammy Cahn, was a patient at the Joslin Diabetes Center. Upon his death in 1993, his family established the High Hopes Fund to provide hope and encouragement to kids with diabetes while supporting research. The annual High Hopes Gala, held Nov. 19 at the Renaissance Boston Waterfront Hotel, continued the mission with a dinner and auction that drew 400 people and raised more than $1 million.

2. Patty Eames, student affairs coordinator at MIT Leaders for Global Operations, and Chris Abbott, senior analyst at Tekla Capital Management

3. Event co-chairs Gerard Branka, vice president of Pathway Capital Management, and wife Emily Branka

4. Bernard Fulp, president of GoBiz Solutions, and wife Carol Fulp, president and CEO of The Partnership

4. Dalay Parrondo and Irlan Silva, soloists at Boston Ballet

1. Event honorees Gordon Weir, investigator, and wife Susan Bonner-Weir, senior investigator, both at Joslin Diabetes Center

5. Event emcee J.C. Monahan, co-anchor of Chronicle on WCVB-TV (Ch. 5), and husband Jim Farrell, documentary filmmaker

Q: MY SKIN IS SO DRY RIGHT NOW; WHAT IS THE BEST WAY TO MOISTURIZE?

A: In the winter our skin needs more hydration than usual and becomes dry from the wind and cold, as well as low humidity due to indoor heating. In winter our skin's ability to retain moisture is decreased by 25%. Your skin needs moisturizers with a combination of humectant and occlusive ingredients to keep the stratum corneum, the outermost layer of the skin, healthy.

Humectants pull moisture into the skin. Hyaluronic acid is among the strongest and can hold up to 1,000 times its weight in water. Other examples are glycerin and squalane. Occlusives lock in and retain the moisture in your skin and also provide a barrier to the elements. Examples include lipids and jojoba oil.

At SkinHealth we can guide you to the right professional-strength moisturizer for your particular skin.

GOING ROGUE

STAR WARS FANS FINALLY HAVE A PREQUEL TO EMBRACE.

"It is a period of civil war. Rebel spaceships, striking from a hidden base, have won their first victory against the evil Galactic Empire. During the battle, Rebel spies managed to steal secret plans to the Empire's ultimate weapon, the DEATH STAR, an armored space station with enough power to destroy an entire planet."

These words will be familiar to anyone who's seen 1977's original Star Wars (subsequently known under its revised title Star Wars: Episode IV – A New Hope). The passage appeared scrolling upward toward infinity during the movie's opening title crawl—the now-traditional way that all seven numbered episodes (and counting) of the series have begun.

But director Gareth Edwards' Rogue One is different than the Star Wars we're familiar with. Billed as a standalone, Jedi-less story set apart from the numbered adventures of the Skywalker clan, it breaks with tradition, dispensing not only with the title crawl, but with the Star Wars logo itself. Pretty bold for a movie that nevertheless spends most of its 2 hour and 14 minute running time dramatizing the events described in A New Hope's title crawl.

It's technically a standalone film, but it still functions as a direct lead-in to the events of Episode IV, and in many ways, it's a more satisfying prequel than series originator George Lucas' official prequel trilogy, even if it takes a while to find its footing.

Part of what holds this picture back is the lack of a strong musical component—Oscar-winning composer Michael Giacchino had a scant four weeks to compose the score after replacing Alexandre Desplat in the 11th hour—or finely etched characters to earn our empathy. Overall, it may be better than last year's Episode VII: The Force Awakens, with more surprises in store for faithful fans than director J.J. Abrams' enjoyable but thinly veiled rehash of A New Hope. Nevertheless, Abrams caught lightning in a bottle when he cast series newcomers Daisy Ridley, John Boyega and Adam Driver, who more than held their own opposite the original trilogy's stars, Harrison Ford, Carrie Fisher and Mark Hamill. We really grew to care what happened to them.

By contrast, the band of Rebels at the center of this film's PG-13 action (much of it captured with handheld cameras by Zero Dark Thirty cinematographer Greig Fraser in another break from Star Wars norms) are a collection of character types who would feel right at home in a picture like 1967's The Dirty Dozen, clearly an inspiration behind Edwards' gritty war picture. Or at least they would, if they had personality beyond their sole defining traits.

Take Jyn Erso (The Theory of Everything Oscar nominee Felicity Jones). Another Star Wars protagonist with daddy issues, she's broken out of Imperial prison by members of the Rebel Alliance, who need her help in tracking down Galen Erso (Mads Mikkelsen from NBC's Hannibal), her father and one of the galaxy's most brilliant minds. She's got a chip on her shoulder, but you'd probably be a little angry if your beloved "papa" abandoned you and became the Galactic Empire's version of J. Robert Oppenheimer, the reluctant architect of the Death Star.

She's overseen by Cassian Andor (Y Tu Mamá También's Diego Luna), a Rebel spy and an assassin who will always shoot first. His extensive combat experience is crucial to infiltrating an Imperial Security Complex on Scarif, a deceptively idyllic tropical planet that becomes a war zone during the film's thrilling third act. It features the series' finest example of a sustained space battle, intercut with a brutal ground assault—and that's saying a lot, considering the Star Wars movies have collected multiple Oscars for their groundbreaking visual effects.

But first, we have to sit through the slow build of the convoluted first two acts, which introduce us to Bodhi Rook (an underutilized Riz Ahmed from HBO's The Night Of), an Imperial cargo pilot who defects from the Empire to deliver a fateful message to Saw Gerrera (Oscar winner Forest Whitaker, dripping gravitas), a hardened freedom fighter battling on the outer fringes of the Rebellion. Rounding out the cast are Boston-bred Donnie Yen, who's a standout as Chirrut Îmwe, a blind, Zatoiche-like spiritual warrior, and Chinese actor/writer/director Wen Jiang as Baze Malbus, Îmwe's loyal protector. And last, but certainly not least, is Alan Tudyk (of the sci-fi series Firefly), who creates an indelible motion-captured performance as the computer-animated K-2SO, a droll, Rebel-reprogrammed Imperial Enforcer Droid who lacks a verbal filter. It says something about this film's script that a robot is its best character.

But despite its flaws, Rogue One remains one of the franchise's brighter efforts, ending on a tremendous high, due in no small part to a glorious extended cameo by Darth Vader. With fewer than 10 minutes of screen time, the Dark Lord of the Sith is presented as the villain fans have always wanted, but rarely seen. This may represent the ultimate case of fan service, but during its final moments, the film has finally given the faithful the prequel they always wanted. ◆

SOLID SOUNDS OF '16

MY ALBUM AND SONG PICKS FROM A MEMORABLE YEAR IN MUSIC.

ALBUMS OF THE YEAR

BEYONCÉ, Lemonade (Columbia) The queen of R&B/pop turns lemons into her most ambitious manifesto, a tale of infidelity spanning rage, reconciliation and a genre-bridging sonic palette that fits such varied guests as Jack White, Kendrick Lamar and James Blake. Cinematic even without its rich video version.

DAVID BOWIE, Blackstar (Columbia) Rock's foremost innovator set the bar just one week into 2016 with his best album in decades, spun in brooding jazz textures and foreboding lyrics. "Look up here, I'm in heaven," Bowie sang. "I've got scars that can't be seen." Two days later, he was dead from cancer, the first of many icons lost this year.

ANGEL OLSEN, My Woman (Jagjaguwar) Alternately stark and lush, aching and fun, the transporting third record from this Midwestern singer/songwriter evokes girl groups, Stevie Nicks and gauzy grunge, led by Olsen's spectral-to-soaring voice.

CAR SEAT HEADREST, Teens of Denial (Matador) Indie-rock savant Will Toledo sings like a cross between the Kinks' Ray Davies and Pavement's Stephen Malkmus with all the lyricism and irony that suggests. Yet it's this album's dynamic sprawl—scuzzy guitar stomps, ruminative piano changeups, loopy tweaks—that seals his shape-shifty genius.

CHANCE THE RAPPER, Coloring Book (self-released) This aptly named mixtape from Chicago's hip-hop wunderkind blends gospel and rap in a kaleidoscopic romp, exuding positivity and melodic creativity as he steps to the head of the class.

RADIOHEAD, A Moon Shaped Pool (XL) Distanced from overt rock or reinvention, Radiohead casts consonant, hauntingly downbeat yet dulcet moodscapes, with Thom Yorke's forlorn voice floating in Jonny Greenwood's opaque orchestrations.

CHARLES LLOYD, I Long to See You (Blue Note) The jazz sax/flute sage adds guitarists Bill Frisell and pedal-steel ace Greg Leisz to his group, bringing harmonic icing to a dream weave of originals and folk-pop standards that smolder and penetrate. Willie Nelson and Norah Jones lend their own subtle charms in vocal cameos.

SOLANGE, A Seat at the Table (Columbia) In contrast to her list-topping sister Bey, the younger Knowles earns her spot with quiet consistency. She cracks pop consciousness with poised neo-soul that speaks to self-empowerment, aided by spoken insights from her parents, a rap from Lil Wayne and co-producers that include Raphael Saadiq, Q-Tip and Dirty Projectors' Dave Longstreth.

DRIVE-BY TRUCKERS, American Band (ATO) A white Southern band that bucks its region's political climate, the Truckers nod to Black Lives Matter on an album that ranks with their early '00s prime. Led by singer/songwriter/guitarists Patterson Hood and Mike Cooley, the group rocks with grit and conviction.

AND THE KIDS, Friends Share Lovers (Signature Sounds) A Northampton girls' club that made its sophomore album in Montreal to include a deported band member, And the Kids expands its bohemian world with oblique angles and dream-pop layering, honing a distinct sound worth wider recognition.

SONGS OF THE YEAR

Xenia Rubinos, "Mexican Chef" (Anti-) Playful pastiche of jazz, soul and hip-hop with political bite. Margo Price, "Hands of Time" (Third Man) Candid, poetic autobiography in the hands of a promising country newcomer. Christine and the Queens, "Tilted" (Atlantic) Seductive electro-pop that pulses with a French singer's paean to people who feel out of balance. The Jayhawks, "Quiet Corners & Empty Spaces" (Sham) Roots-rock pioneers return with a graceful jangle. Beyoncé, featuring Kendrick Lamar, "Freedom" (Columbia) An exhilarating cry that rings across swirling organ and martial momentum. Sturgill Simpson, "Brace for Impact (Live a Little)" (Atlantic) A shot of soulful space-blues from a country traditionalist who likes to push the boundaries of the genre. Foals, "What Went Down" (Warner Bros.) British rockers roar with their most densely visceral song to date. White Denim, "Had 2 Know (Personal)" (Downtown) A head-spinning entry to this reborn Texas outfit's latest album, as if Molly Hatchet were jamming with Rush. Parquet Courts, "Human Performance" (Rough Trade) Brooklyn post-punk acolytes wax nostalgic on relationship peculiarities in the title track of their eclectic latest album. Anohni, "Drone Bomb Me" (Secretly Canadian) The former force behind Antony and the Johnsons finds her voice in billowing protest music over dense electronic accents. ◆

FACT CHUCKER

SAY WHAT YOU WILL ABOUT 2016...NO, REALLY, SAY WHATEVER YOU WANT!

ARE YOU UPSET ABOUT FAKE NEWS? Me too. Or, should I say, me was. Is that an expression that people use, let alone one that's grammatically correct? Me uncare. That's another one that I might've just made up, but I have a strong feeling it's correct. And because I have a strong feeling about it, that means it is correct. Because that's how it works now. We're all allowed—nay, encouraged—to believe whatever we want, regardless of history, observation or the laws of physics. And let me tell you, as a member of the media, this is such a relief.

For most of my career, by which I mean up until about two months ago, I was forced to write things that were objectively provable. It was so tedious. I'd turn in a story, and then a few days later a "fact-checker" (obsolete profession alert!) would email me a bunch of questions about my sources. Boooorrrr-ing. And then, get this: If I made a mistake—like if I wrote that Bob Kraft made his fortune in macaroni and cheese, or that the USS Constitution was used as One-Eyed Willy's pirate ship in The Goonies—the publication would have to run a correction. If you haven't seen one of those, it's a statement where you admit that you're wrong and explain why. Like they would've done in 1800 or 2015 or whenever it was that we last agreed on the basic structure of reality.

Now, instead of being forced to consider ideas that might conflict with my preconceived notions, I can just find a website or a social media post or an email from my great-aunt Hilda that reinforces my existing ideas. And because that information is out there, written down for me to read, it carries at least the same weight as any other information. Moreover, if these statements are delivered by a badly lit guy pointing a camera at himself and getting angry, well, even better.

Here's one real-life example for you. Last time I was down in Miami, the high tide came up over the top of a boat ramp and flooded the parking lot all the way to the back. Now what's up with that? Was the parking lot designed to go underwater at high tide, or is something else going on? Well, soon thereafter I was watching the Patriots out at a bar and talking to the guy next to me about solar panels, on which he'd invested about $45,000. I didn't mention climate change, but he made a point of saying, "I don't believe in climate change. I just got the panels for the tax breaks. I think we're going to have an ice age 2,000 years from now."

WHO NOSE? If one person on the internet says it's true, who am I to question it?

I wondered where he got that information, so I Googled "Ice age 2,000 years from now" and found IceAgeNow.Info, which sounds pretty authoritative to me. Sure enough, this site confirmed that because of "orbital shifting," we're in fact heading into a new ice age. As one commenter wrote, "The whole premise about the coming cold is so simple to me that I can explain it to anyone and frequently do. The sun cycle-underwater volcanoes-magnetic reversal and the weakening of the sun's geomagnetic effect on the earth's geomagnetic field can exacerbate volcanism and earthquakes." Yeah, duh! And in case you doubt IceAgeNow's credentials, I'll have you know that author of the site is a scientist,

Now, instead of being forced to consider ideas that might conflict with my preconceived notions, I can just find a website or a social media post or an email from my great-aunt Hilda that reinforces my existing ideas.

by which I mean an architect. So put away those water pumps you've been using in the streets, residents of Miami. In fact, buy some sweaters!

Let me tell you, life is so much easier when you can believe whatever you want. You can get tax advice from Wesley Snipes and eat nothing but candied pears, because you saw somewhere that Cleopatra subsisted exclusively on those and lived to be 142. However, even though all ideas are equally valid, you should think about the implications of your behavior. Like, don't fart in an elevator. Not because it's impolite, but because that's the signal for a gang initiation. And you do not want to get caught in the middle of a gang initiation, no matter how strong and agile the candied pears have made you.

Since I'm that rare combination of fatalistic and trendy, I'm embracing the fact that there are no more facts—or at least, none that are wrong. For instance, I now get all my news about what day it is from TodayIsTuesday.com. Oftentimes, people who I thought were friends will challenge my beliefs, saying ignorant things like "No, today is Wednesday," or "There are seven days of the week." Sure. That's what The New York Times and CNN want you to think. But at least some of the time, maybe one-seventh, even the most hardened shill for the calendar cartel admits, "Yes, it's Tuesday." Which causes me to wonder: Is it? ◆

The Dance / John D. Spooner

GOOD READS

SOUND ADVICE ON WORTHY BOOKS, SEASONAL BLUES AND BAD OFFERS

JOHN D. SPOONER IS AN INVESTMENT ADVISER, author and novelist. His most recent book is No One Ever Told Us That: Money and Life Lessons for Young Adults. Here, he responds to queries from advice seekers of all ages. Send your conundrums to thedance@improper.com.

One of my resolutions is to read a lot more in 2017. I feel the need to lose myself in entertainment that isn't on the screen. I don't even want to use a Kindle, just old-fashioned books that I can touch and feel and mark up. Can you recommend any of your favorites? And I don't care what the subject is, fiction or nonfiction. Be reminded that I'm a young (kinda) woman. I love this question and I love your spirit of adventure. Here's a variety of titles to choose from. Eclectic, but that might be right up your alley.

There is a writer named Amor Towles who writes novels of manners. Buy his first editions because they will be valuable someday. His second book, A Gentleman in Moscow, is set in the city's Metropol Hotel. If you stay with it for 50 pages or so, you'll be transported. As for the author, I knew both of his parents; I've thought this gene pool should produce someone very special. And it did.

For mysteries, thrillers that are fresh, snarky and irreverent, try any of the Virgil Flowers novels by John Sandford. And the British thriller writer John Lawton has a hero who is the son of a lord but works as a police detective during the blitz in London in the early 1940s. Lawton will get you hooked. Great plotting and sexy, too.

If you've never read George V. Higgins' The Friends of Eddie Coyle, you're missing a classic. In my view, it's one of the best novels of the 20th century. Higgins is the model for so many mystery writers who followed him, including Elmore Leonard, another great.

Two last suggestions: Jane Gardam's novel Old Filth. (The protagonist's nickname is an acronym that means "Failed in London? Try Hong Kong.") Gardam is an extraordinary creator of characters, and you will wonder at her use of language and surprises of plot. Lastly, something off the beaten path, a thriller with a big heart, a very clever mystery... Before the Fall by Noah Hawley.

I lost a dear grandfather recently, and a few friends of mine lost close relatives, all during the holiday season. Why does it seem that a new year brings a lot of sadness with it? I never noticed this until the last few years. Or am I just depressed? You're probably not depressed. Unfortunately, it's one of the many downsides to growing up. Loss and mourning is all part of this process.

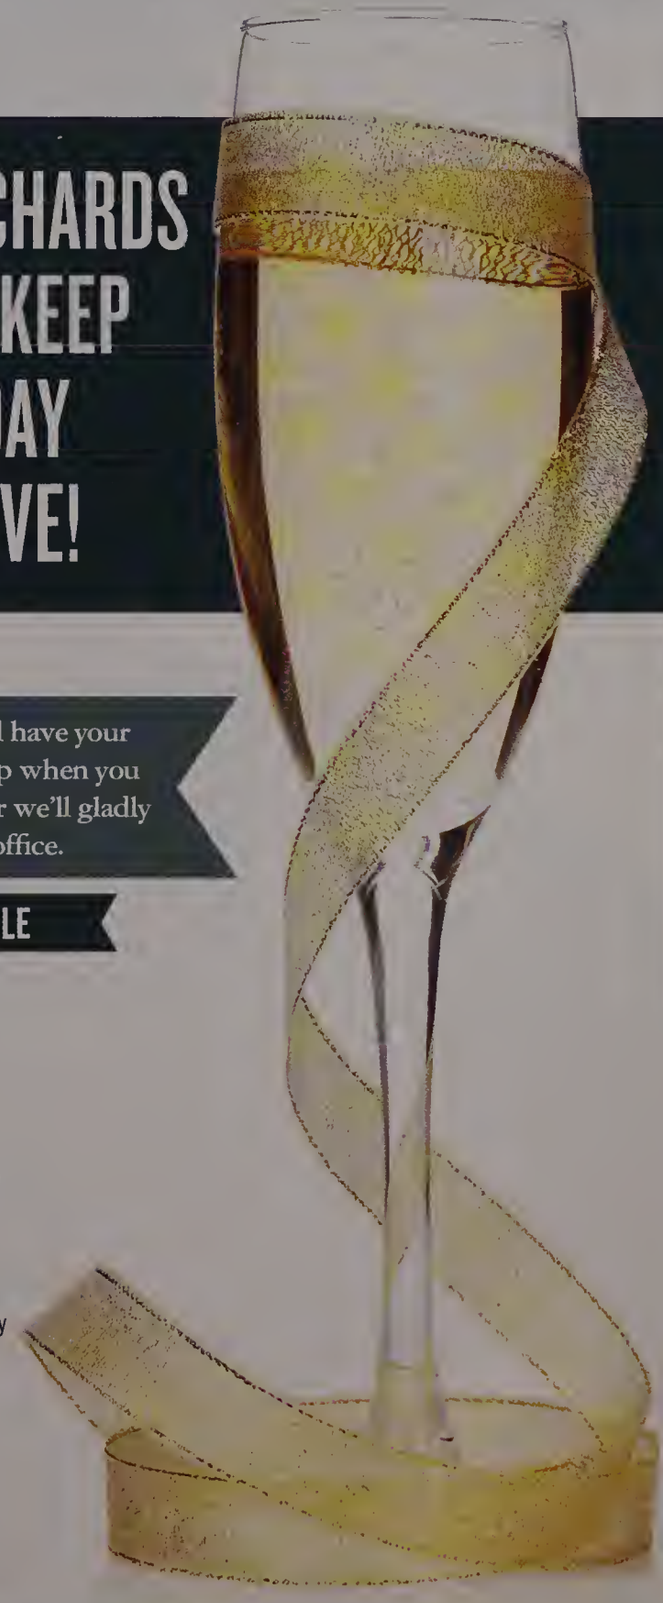
As far as the seasonal blues are concerned, you'd be surprised how many people view the holidays with dread. Memories of happy childhoods, tough childhoods, early darkness, relationships challenged: Shall I go on? And it's true that so many deaths occur at the very end and beginning of a year. The spirit seems to hang on until certain dates kick in—Christmas, New Year's. Beginnings and ends. People hang on until benchmarks, then let go.

So how do you deal with grief and the mourning process, particularly when you're young? The busier you are, the less you will be dragged down. Immerse yourself in work and your hobbies and your friendships. At these times, we need to be surrounded by life. Get involved with a nonprofit you care about, take dance classes, make sure you exercise. Find someone to love you and who you can love. We all need the touch of real hands, not virtual ones. It's our ticket out of grief.

I'm a young lawyer. I want to be a rainmaker, someone who brings in a lot of business. But I have a dilemma and I can't ask any of the partners about it. I've been approached by someone pretty friendly with my parents. He's in the real estate business, a developer and, I believe, really rich. The fees for doing his legal work could be enormous. But he's a very tough man, crude and demanding. Very difficult. "I'll give you a lot of business," he told me. "But I'll be the most important person in your life, and you can expect my calls any day of the week and any time. Get it?" What should I do? In my profession, the "800-pound gorilla" client can own you, not the other way around. Beware the 800-pound gorilla. You have to be able to turn down business, even if the dollar signs are compelling. You cannot compromise your ethics. Bullies need to be taught a lesson and be told that they cannot treat people this way.



Beware the 800-pound gorilla. You have to be able to turn down business...

It's tough to turn down immediate benefits to you. But it's a mirage. Sooner or later, the 800-pound gorilla always leaves us. They'll go through lawyers like poop through a goose.

You'll feel good about yourself for turning him down. It would have eventually ended badly, and the lessons you learned from it will serve you well. As for your parents' friendship with him, just tell your father, "It's OK, Dad, to tell your buddy, 'My kid's young. He'll learn about the world; let's have a martini.'" They'll stay friends, and you'll be free from a relationship that could have been a disaster. ◆

Soroff On / Frankie Shaw

SINGLE MINDED

THE MULTIHYPHENATE TALENT TALKS WOMEN IN HOLLYWOOD, HER EARLY STRUGGLES AND MR. ROBOT.

DIRECTOR, WRITER AND ACTOR FRANKIE SHAW, 33, was born and raised in Brookline. After studying literature at Barnard College, she moved with her infant son to Los Angeles to pursue her career. Her short film SMILF premiered at Sundance and won a jury award in 2015. She recently wrote, directed and starred in a Showtime pilot based on SMILF that was filmed in Boston. Her second short, Too Legit, premiered at Sundance earlier this year, and she has been accepted into the prestigious WGA Showrunner Training Program for 2017. She appears in the forthcoming feature film Stronger, opposite Jake Gyllenhaal, and her other credits include playing Shayla on the critically acclaimed USA show Mr. Robot. She lives in Los Angeles.

JONATHAN SOROFF: Do you see yourself as a maverick?

FRANKIE SHAW: I would probably never call myself a maverick, but I do have a very hard time following the rules. And oftentimes when there are rules, I have an instinctive reaction to do exactly the opposite.

You're pretty outspoken as a feminist in an industry not terribly friendly to women. Is that a constant battle?

The key is to surround yourself with people who understand the way in which the system is set up, but they're few and far between. On one hand, the experiences I've had could be really debilitating. There are things that are said to me now, especially since I'm directing, that you would not fucking believe. It's way more subtle than it used to be. Some dude will be talking to me, a privileged white executive, and I'll be thinking, "Why is my stomach in knots?" And I'll realize afterward that he was putting me down without even knowing he was doing it.

Your satire Too Legit was inspired by Todd Akin's infamous statements about rape. What do you think it says about us as a society that we even have a term like "rape culture"?

That's such a good question. Because I think the system we live in is a patriarchy, it allows for so much gray area in terms of positions of power when it comes to gender dynamics. ... We're so conditioned to accept violence against women. I forget what country it was, but there was an ad for makeup to cover bruises from domestic abuse. We're just way too used to it, and we all internalize it.

So what steps would you propose to change that?

There are so many things, but one of them is having stories told from all different perspectives. The pilot I just shot for Showtime really goes into the "maiden, mother, crone" syndrome, whereby women are put into one of those categories through the lens of patriarchy. So I'm trying to question, how do we become the protagonists of our own story, so that we're not labeled in those terms? What's really fucking devastating is that most of the people making the decisions are rich white men. My friend's show just got canceled on Amazon, despite having the second-best opening and 80 percent viewer retention, but the guy never watched it and didn't like it.

How do you teach your son that objectifying women is wrong? I'm very protective. When he was little and he was drawing soldiers, I'd ask which one was the female soldier. When he's playing a game on the computer and there's a girl in a bikini, I'll say, "The animators value women for their bodies, which we don't." At this point, he'll point at a billboard or something and say, "Mom, it's sexism."

Mr. Robot—best show on TV? It was created by one of the most generous, brilliant men I've ever met: Sam Esmail. He is the reason the show is such a phenomenon. It has such a strong following, and it was so fun, because obviously none of us knew it was going to take off the way it did. And Sam is very collaborative but also has such a strong vision, being on that set was a feeling of total creativity and focus.

Worst job you ever had as a struggling actor? I wrote college application essays for the rich kids of Brentwood. It was very, very unethical, but for some reason, it's a talent of mine: inhabiting the voice of a pimply-faced 17-year-old boy who wants to get into Skidmore.

SMILF*—was that your life on film? I think it goes to what we were saying about following rules. There have been all these situations in my life where I find out later that people around me were like, "What the fuck is she doing?" I got pregnant when I was 25, and I was like, "I don't want to be in this relationship anymore. I'm going to move to LA and have this kid alone." Not realizing how insane that was. I found a roommate off of Craigslist. It was so hard. I was so broke. And I was auditioning and renting out my tiny apartment to subletters and staying on couches with my kid. And I was like, "I've got to write to get myself out of this situation," and that was SMILF.

How do you improvise a whole movie? You have something you need to accomplish in a scene, like I need to invite a guy over to my house. The first take is 20 minutes long. You're flirting. All kinds of shit comes out of both of your mouths. Some of it is terrible, but some of it is funny. Then when you go to take two, you narrow it down to the good parts. You write the scene as you go, and it's so fun that way, because you're so alive when you're doing it.

Role you're most proud of? Mr. Robot was super fun. When you're starting out, you just take anything you can. I remember when I was cast in Blue Mountain State, it was my first gig. It was a totally misogynistic TV show about objectifying women and drinking and football. And I had to find a way to make the character interesting. It's nice to get roles that are a bit more substantive.

How much of your persona do you attribute to being from Boston? I'm super sarcastic. I have no patience. I'm really bossy.

Thing you miss most about Boston? Being with other people like that. You have to be so fucking polite here in L.A.

Would you prefer to maintain your outsider status, doing edgy work, or do you want the bigger recognition that comes from being more mainstream? I want to direct studio movies. I want to reach a broad audience and bring some of my point of view to that. There's such a lack of women working in that sphere, so that's my goal. ◆

REDESIGNING BOSTON

With development booming and a new year looming, we asked local designers and architects from a range of disciplines what element of Boston's built environment they'd like to see reimagined in 2017. Here's their blueprint for tomorrow.

BY JACQUELINE HOUTON

Tweak the T

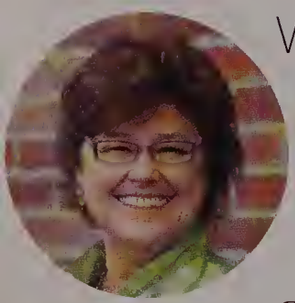
Surprise, surprise: Multiple designers suggested America's oldest subway could use an update. "Every improper Bostonian has had to fight their way onto a packed train, only to see that a car a bit farther down was nearly empty," says Jordan Nollman, CEO and founder of Sprout, a Boston studio that's designed everything from apps to electric razors to labels for hard cider.

"To help create a better overall experience and even distribution of riders, Sprout proposes designing a Smart Mat System using LED lights that would be retrofitted into the yellow safety mats in every T station. This would allow riders to know which cars have the most available space. Each train would be outfitted with sensors that know how full a car is and can relay that information to the Smart Mat and people's smart phones. Before a train approaches, the lights will direct passenger traffic to the cars that are least crowded. This would also be paired with a redesign of the T's app that would help users get up-to-the-minute train locations, 'beat-the-rush' notifications and occupancy levels. Sprout would also bring social connectivity to the app, with community-based reporting of issues and schedule changes."

"Every improper Bostonian has had to fight their way onto a packed train, only to see that a car a bit farther down was nearly empty."

Meanwhile, Eric Gunther, co-founder of Boston design and technology studio Sosolimited, turned his attention to an invisible but inescapable part of Bostonians' daily commute. "If you ride the subway in Boston, you've heard the beep, that high-pitched sound that plays when you tap your Charlie Card to enter. It might make you wince. You might not notice it at all. Either way it has made its stressful little mark on you for the day. At least once a month I think about how I would redesign that sound," Gunther says. "I'd make it a softer, more rounded sound, with a tail that rings out as you pass through the gate. It has to cut through the noise of a crowded subway station, but I'd make it more natural sounding. Less machine and more acoustic. I'd give it some variation, maybe even encode it with useful information for commuters. I'd make it a warm, welcoming sound with a friendly melody that says, 'Thanks for riding the T. You're safe down here.' "

While it would be a subtler intervention than Sosolimited's recently unveiled Diffusion Choir—a 400-piece kinetic sculpture that mimics the harmonious movements of birds and now greets workers at a Cambridge biopharm company—Gunther thinks the small change would be a welcome one. "That little beep is an opportunity to increase the daily well-being of a lot of people. It's a chance to give a reassuring, delightful voice to our machines and make them sound less like angry robots from 1950s sci-fi movies."



GIVE THE MASS. PIKE A MAKEOVER

The Mass. Pike transitioned to all-electronic tolling in October, so the old booths are coming down, but another fixture on the road hasn't changed. "The Mass. Pike logo is due for a major branding facelift," says Jessica Maniatis, owner and creative director of JSGD, a South Boston graphic design agency whose clients include beauty fave Follain and the Together music festival. "The way people are driving on the Pike has changed, and what was once touted as the 'World's Most Modern Superhighway' is still sporting a pilgrim hat. We're envisioning a clean typographic approach that emphasizes their newly streamlined driving experience."

MASSPIKE

Reconnect to the Water, water everywhere—but in Boston, where water makes up nearly half of the city's 90 square miles, you wouldn't always know it. "This past June I was on the Boston Climate Bridge tour of Copenhagen, and I was struck that they are doing a much better job of reutilizing their former industrial waterfronts," says Gail Sullivan, managing principal at Jamaica Plain's Studio G Architects. »

REVIVE A GRANDE DAME

"Every time I take a bus to South Station or downtown, this beautiful building has been neglected and boarded up for as long as I can remember" Travis Blake says of Hotel Alexandra, an 1875 building crumbling on the corner of Mass. Ave. and Washington Street. The Church of Scientology purchased the property in 2008, planning to renovate the building for its new Boston headquarters. But those plans never materialized, and the Gothic beauty has languished for years. Blake, who works for Sousa Design Architects—a firm that's designed dozens of restaurants around town, including the Gallows, located a half-mile down the street—would like to see it revitalized, with retail or a hospitality space on the ground floor and apartments or condos above. "I envision this space where the historic architectural details could be exposed and integrated with modern textures, materials, lighting and furniture to create a visually stunning destination," Blake says. "Restoring the exterior to emphasize the inherent beauty of the Gothic-style architecture with the banded sandstone, wrought-iron gates and stone detailing, along with the updated commercial space, would help reinforce this building as a central landmark in a somewhat forgotten area of the South End." He may get his wish. Having purchased an office complex in Allston last year, the church put Hotel Alexandra up for sale, and a source close to the project says it could be under new ownership early in the new year.

The Kastrup Sea Bath

Water

She was part of a delegation of 20 architects, engineers, policy experts and other professional women who traveled to Copenhagen this summer to share knowledge on sustainable development efforts, and she got some great ideas from the Danes. "Copenhagen has used much of the canal frontage for new cultural institutions like the Opera House designed by Henning Larsen Architects. You can see the number of boats, some public and some private, plying the water. They taxi people across the canal regularly." Sullivan envisions water buses linking points along the Charles River, like Watertown Square, Lechmere and Charles Street, as well as stops in the Harbor, such as East Boston, Aquarium, Rowes Wharf and Fort Point Channel. "This would increase public transportation options, reduce burden on road infrastructure and most importantly reduce wasted commuter time while providing great opportunities to enjoy our metro area from the water."

"Water 'pads' in the Harbor could provide great opportunities to get engaged with our water, which is the reason Boston was founded here in 1630."

Sullivan also imagines a swimming pool in the Charles—a concept the Charles River Conservancy is already pursuing through its Swimmable Charles Initiative—and in the Harbor as well, picturing "a beautiful light structure surrounding and protecting a swimming and sunbathing spot," much like the Kastrup Sea Bath, an award-winning sculptural structure designed by White Arkitekter. "Water 'pads' in the Harbor could provide great opportunities to get engaged with our water, which is the reason Boston was founded here in 1630," she adds, suggesting that such floating pads could support a cafe, exhibits or a home for house boats. As for the Charles, she'd also like to see a destination restaurant on the river, perhaps near the former Publick Theatre site, and a permanent structure for canoe and kayak access—Copenhagen even has an area dedicated to kayak volleyball.

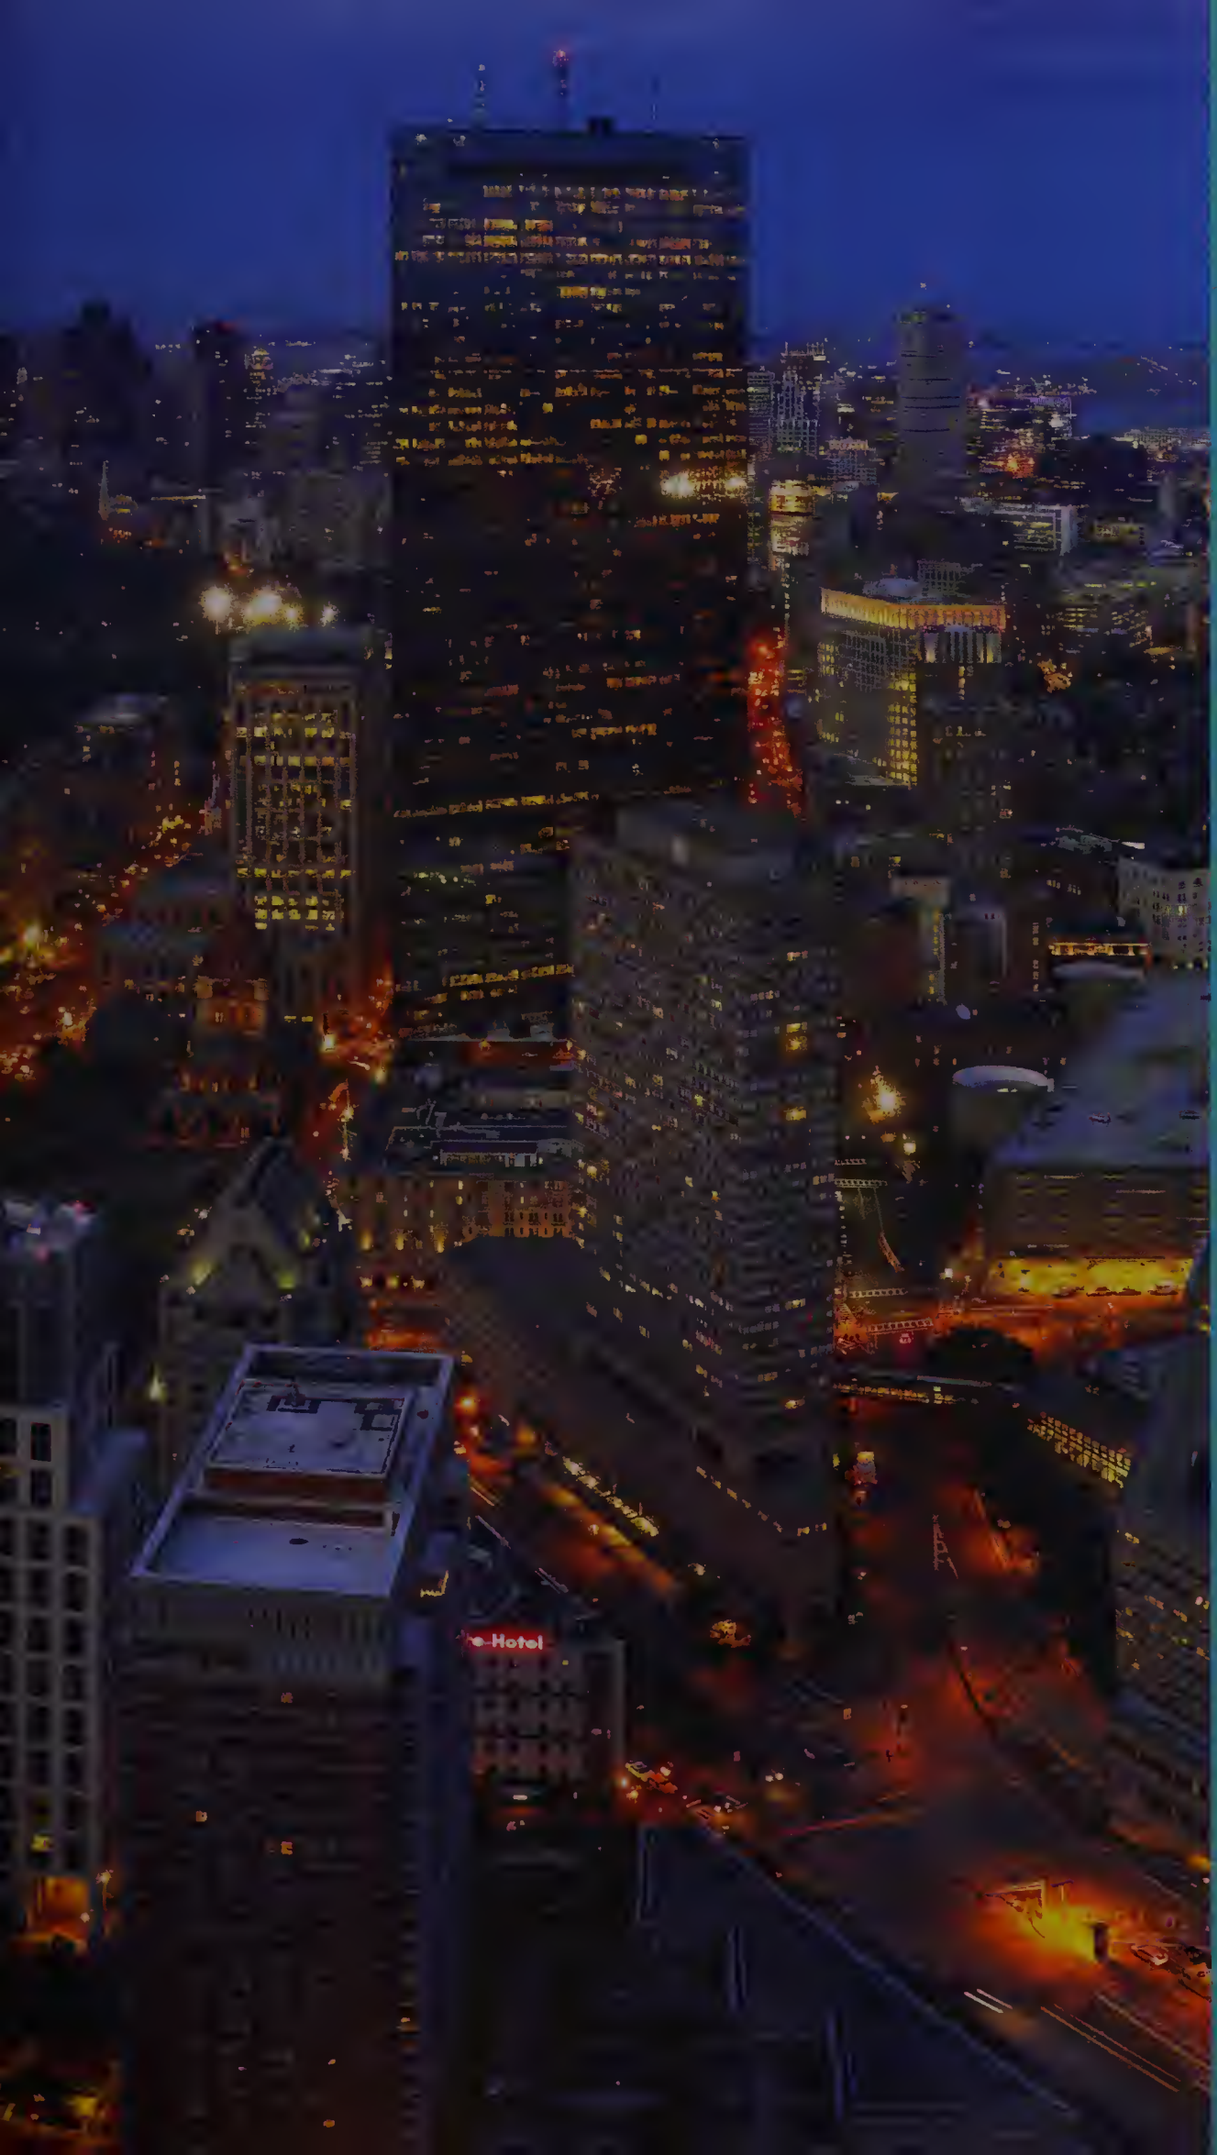
GIVE BOSTON A BROOKLYN

"In a city full of higher learning, innovation, culture and vibrance, Boston's built environment somehow lacks personality; it's reserved, packaged and mass-produced," says Erik Rueda, CEO of Chelsea's Erik Rueda Design Lab, which has crafted Mac Mini-embedded conference tables for travel biz Kayak and apothecary-inspired counters for online pharmacy PillPack. "In New York, Brooklyn acts as its artisan asylum, a borough rife with talented craftspeople, designers, artists and creators that inject into their work that vitality that Boston hasn't quite unlocked. New York is brimming with beautiful, handmade, contemporary furniture and interiors. They have personality. They are made by people you can talk to and easily visit," says Rueda, who imagines a design district that would help artisans connect with customers. "Walk into a local workshop, have a cup of coffee and chat about your idea. This happens to us often and we love it." It may happen more in 2017, when Rueda plans to turn the floor above the lab into a collaborative office space where designers, architects and fabricators can share their networks and knowhow. "We're building a design guild," he says. "There is something so special about locally sourced anything. Let the growing maker community breathe life into the built environments that are the heart of Boston."

COPENHAGEN MEDIA CENTER

Get Us from Point A to Point B

There's a reason that old wives' tale about Boston's roads being built on cow paths has lingered for so long. These three pros had thoughts on making it easier to get around town, whether on foot or behind the wheel.



"I would love to see a redesigning of the city so that Boston's neighborhoods feel more connected," says Liz Pawlak, vice president of Design Museum Boston. "This doesn't have to be a huge physical undertaking or an expensive redesign." Consider the ideas that came out of the museum's Urban Innovation Festival, a three-day hackathon that took place under an I-93 overpass in July. "Ten teams paired with local residents designed prototypes to make the area between South Boston and the South End more livable and connected," Pawlak explains. "The museum is working to produce the winning design, the Urban Hike, created by the team from Fidelity Labs, which would connect SOWA to the Greenway and downtown with a trail of markers leading folks through exciting points of interest in different communities. We imagine applying this concept to link other neighborhoods as well. The potential for design to transform and unify the city is huge!"

"Before we dream up robotic Dunkin' Donuts clerks, let's start with the basics, like street signs, traffic lights and clear lane delineation," says Andrew Smiles, creative director of Tank, a Cambridge design firm whose clients include MiniLuxe, TEDxCambridge and Reebok. He points to the Allstate America's Best Drivers Report, which ranked Boston dead last in its look at 200 American cities, noting that a Boston driver is 167.6 percent more likely to have an accident than the national average. "Is that because we're all Massholes? Possibly. But perhaps we're Massholes because there are street signs on the left side of the street pointing you right, or on the right side pointing you left. There are signs hiding other signs, and signs hidden in trees obviously placed there in the fall (yes, leaves do grow back—every year). It's astounding how Boston has managed to complicate what should be the most simplistic of design challenges: Get me from A to B without using Waze or Google. What we need is an Erik Spiekermann approach to reimagining our Boston wayfinding system," Smiles says, nodding to the designer who's helped Germans make their way through Berlin's metro and Düsseldorf's airport. "Let's start with the simple shit first."

"Mayor Tom Menino's vision to take 1,000 acres on the South Boston waterfront and design and develop it into the first officially labeled innovation district in the U.S. underscores Boston's commitment to lead in innovation," says Tom Burchard, vice president of customer experience design at Altitude, a Somerville firm that's pretty innovative itself, having worked on projects like WikiFoods' edible packaging as well as a "Netflix for cocktails" concept with app-enabled "smart caps" to facilitate perfect pours. "From the ICA to District Hall to the Innovation Center, the area is a literal definition of innovation.... So much so it's created a mass invasion of professional, tech and innovation companies who vacated the traditional downtown neighborhood for a spiffier waterfront address, even luring GE, one of the nation's largest companies." The problem, in Burchard's view? "Our Disney Tomorrowland ideals have a road and traffic management system that feels more like Frontierland, with a 20-minute drive from one end to the other. What this area desperately needs, and clearly deserves, is a bypass loop that allows quick and easy circumnavigation of the Innovation District, providing people with an innovative experience commensurate with the new vision."

REROUTE THE RMV

I moved to Boston eight years ago, and like many new residents, decided to apply for a Massachusetts driver's license. Shockingly I ended up making four trips to the RMV to finalize what should have been a simple, one-visit process in the 21st century," Michael Hendrix recalls. "The headaches persisted from tracking down the correct forms, to providing proof of residence, to driving to the North Shore to sort out insurance in a new state—not to mention the 'take-a-number and wait' process! A colleague shared her recent experience with me, and it turns out the inconveniences are still the same. What should this look like in the digital era?" Hendrix is a partner and executive design director at IDEO Cambridge, no stranger to municipal challenges. The firm helped redesign Boston.gov for the City of Boston in 2016, streamlining a digital labyrinth that previously had nearly 50 motley microsites for different departments. Two of the great characteristics of the digital era are decentralization and network collaboration," Hendrix continues. "In this world we can easily share information between organizations, we can verify identity and we can automate services. The RMV is ripe for these improvements, which will not only create efficiency but a better customer experience. It's not hard to imagine verification through digital network activity (see Lenddo.com, for example), documentation verification via block chain technology, and activation and communication through a social platform like Facebook. Boston is historically known as the 'hub of the universe.' We can show that leadership position today—not by being the center of control—but by being the convener of collaborative networks. Redesigning the RMV is a great example of how we can use this power to improve services in our city—even for something as mundane as a driver's license."

PORTRAIT OF AN ARTIST

BY JONATHAN SOROFF
PHOTOGRAPHED BY HOLLY RIKE

Overlooking the Mass. Turnpike on Ipswich Street, the building that houses the Fenway Studios is the oldest in the country constructed specifically for artists' studios, with 14-foot ceilings and 12-foot, north-facing windows for ideal painterly light. If people notice it at all—whizzing past on the highway or on their way to a ballgame or nightclub—it's probably only to remark on its handsome Arts and Crafts facade, which dates to 1905. Most Bostonians have no clue that inside, painters working in every style and genre are toiling away at their easels. Fewer still know that, among them, a highly unlikely candidate carries on the tradition of the Boston School of painting from the turn of the 20th century.

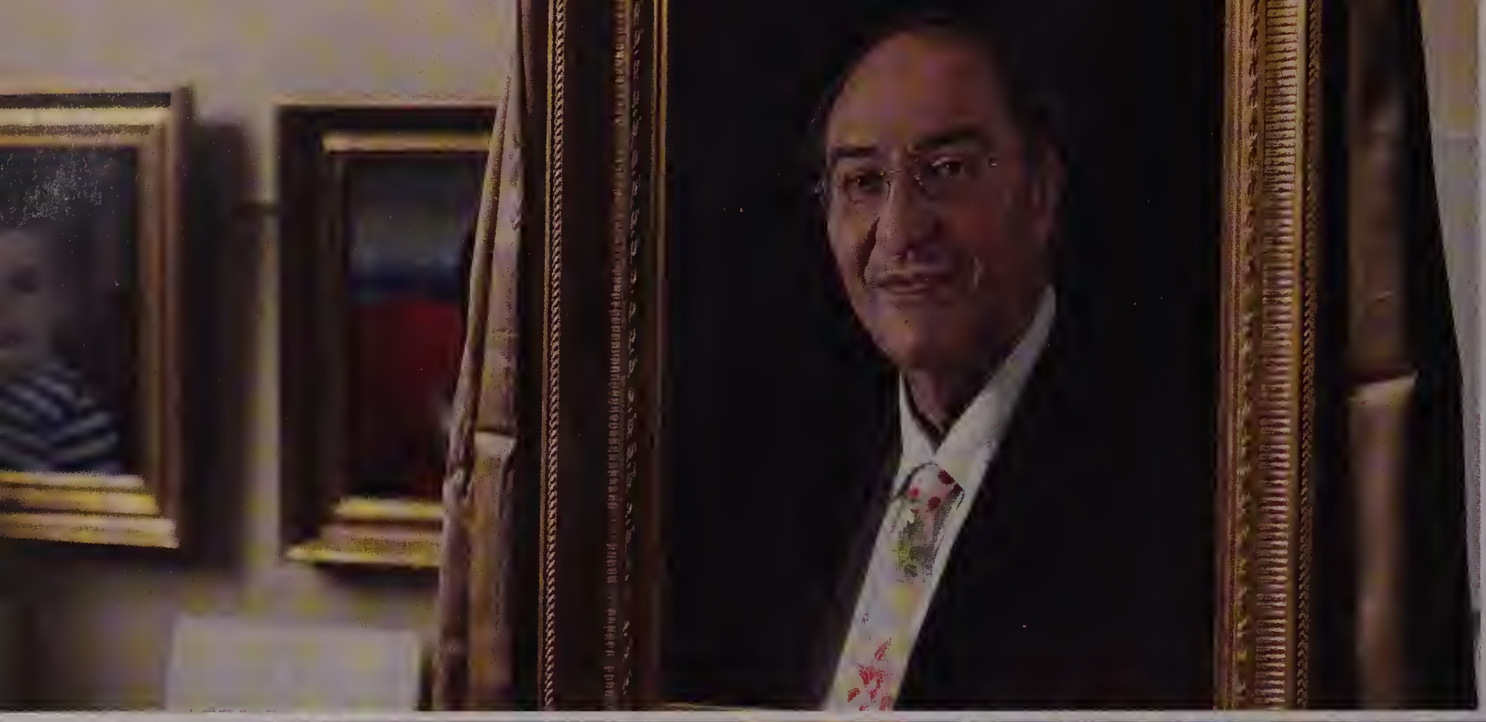
Reverent of the old masters but often described as American impressionists because of the freeness of their brushwork, members of this loosely defined group were heavily influenced by the work of John Singer Sargent and William Morris Hunt, and they included the likes of Edmund Tarbell, Frank Weston Benson and William McGregor Paxton, all of whose work is represented in the Museum of Fine Arts and all of whom taught at the museum school. They would undoubtedly be surprised to learn that more than a century later, their creative torch is being held aloft by an exacting, iconoclastic Japanese artist, descended from an old samurai family.

Yoshi Mizutani, 47, was born in the small industrial city of Suzuka in Mie Prefecture, but from the age of 6 he was raised by his grandparents in the town of Ise on the tip of the Kii Peninsula. Home of the Ise Grand Shrine—the most sacred Shinto site in Japan—it has a rich history, and Mizutani's grandmother, unusual for a woman of her generation, was a haiku poet and traditional sumi (ink wash) painter. She encouraged Yoshi to take up watercolors at the age of 10. By 16, he was highly skilled in the technique, and two years later, he moved to Europe to study the old masters by traveling in Spain, France and Italy.

"When I was 18, I saw a Sargent painting for the first time," he recalls. "I'll never forget. And that was the defining moment. If I never saw his paintings, I wouldn't be an artist."

After soaking in the European tradition, he came to the United States to study with the renowned artist Robert Cormier at the R.H. Ives Gammell Atelier in Boston.

"I wanted to study traditional 19th-century painting," he says, "and the only place to do that was Boston."



Gammell, best known for his series of paintings based upon the poem "The Hound of Heaven," was a mid-20th-century master who had studied briefly in Europe (like most of the Boston School artists) and returned to work and teach at the Fenway Studios. Unfashionable for his era (1893-1981), he eschewed modern art and valued classical, realistic, representational and academic painting above all. Under Cormier, Mizutani received the rigorous five-year training that most of the artists who identify themselves as Boston School painters never actually complete: The first year of his apprenticeship was devoted to cast drawing, the second to life drawing, the third to landscapes, the fourth to still life and the fifth (and, as he describes it, the hardest) to portraits. He extended his studies with Cormier for another two years, focusing largely on portraits.

"Yoshi's training followed the tradition of the Boston School of a century ago," says Robin Starr, director of American and European works of art at Skinner Auctioneers. "He could hardly avoid picking up the loose impressionist brushwork and interest in light so intrinsic to the Boston School, but at the same time, his portraits are fresh, not stodgy and staid. The portraits of the older Boston School painters adhered to the decorum of their day and rarely revealed the inner lives of their subjects. But Yoshi revels in doing that. His portraits are much more modern, in that they capture the individual both visually and emotionally. And that dichotomy is what makes his work so appealing."

Nevertheless, Mizutani is so adept at capturing the style of previous eras that in the late 1990s, he was asked to make forgeries of works by Velázquez, van Dyck and El Greco. "They offered me $12,000 and even gave me old canvas, but I freaked out," he recalls. Yet, in describing his own work, he says, "I intentionally elongate my hands, like van Dyck, so that they're not dead, or like mannequins. But for faces, I look to John Singer Sargent."

His process, meanwhile, is decidedly more modern than the old days.

"Every once in a while, I'll have someone sit for a portrait, but I generally work from photographs. I've become especially well-known for children's portraits [in either oil or graphite], and there's no way you can get a small child to sit for hours these days." Instead, he takes extensive photos and then dabs skin tones onto a small canvas. Besides portraiture, Mizutani produces landscapes as well as floral still lifes so exact that you can almost smell the drooping peonies on the canvas.

"Flowers are a great exercise for skin tones," he points out, and accordingly, flowers from a friend's shop frequently make their way into the studio.

The studio itself is so immaculate that you could, quite literally, eat off the floor. That's due to the artist's punctiliousness, as well as the surprising fact that he's allergic to paint, or at least to an ingredient that many oil paints contain. "I never touch it," he says. "And I use pure paint. It's more difficult than mixing, but I think it gives a better effect."

Aside from easels, supplies and a small kitchen and living area, his studio boasts three mahogany palettes he had carved as exact replicas of those used by John Singer Sargent, the Spanish portraitist Joaquín Sorolla and Edmund Tarbell, a teacher of Ives Gammell. "They're very heavy," Mizutani admits, "so I only use them rarely."

For his efforts, Mizutani has received commissions to paint aristocrats and members of royal families, captains of industry and famous actors (none of whom he likes to name, out of respect for their privacy), and he has received awards from such organizations as the Salmagundi Club in New York and the Copley Society. Four years ago, he spent a year in Madrid, painting the rectors of a Jesuit university.

"His portraits are much more modern, in that they capture the individual both visually and emotionally. And that dichotomy is what makes his work so appealing."

Given his ability to adapt and innovate while remaining steadfastly within the ethos of the Boston School, it's no surprise that Starr describes Mizutani as "the natural heir to John Singer Sargent." In recent years, the 20th-century art world's laser-like focus on modernism has given way to a renewed respect and appreciation for painters like Sargent and William Merritt Chase (the subject of a major exhibition on view at the Museum of Fine Arts through Jan. 16).

Which begs the question of whether Mizutani harbors any fantasies about seeing his work someday hang alongside the Tarbells, Bensons and Paxtons in the MFA's permanent collection. The answer seems to be that he doesn't much care.

"Museums bother me," he says. "I see a bad painting in a museum, and it stays in my head." Spoken like a true artist. ◆

PERFORMING ARTS

A SHOW OF HANDS If idle hands are the devil's playthings, then an idle hand puppet is his mouthpiece—at least in Hand to God. SpeakEasy Stage presents the Tony-nominated black comedy about a fundamentalist Christian ministry that uses sock puppets to preach the Good Word. Things get a bit out of hand, however, when the group leader's teenage son's possessed puppet starts speaking for himself, leading to all kinds of unseemly revelations, violent confrontations and, yep, puppet sex. Think Avenue Q meets The Book of Mormon with a dash of The Exorcist for good measure. Those looking for an antidote to all those feel-good holiday shows should catch the Boston premiere Jan. 6-Feb. 4 at the Wimberly Theatre at the BCA. / Alexandra Cavallo PHOTO: NILE HAWVER / NILE SCOTT SHOTS

WHEN IN ROME One of the last vestiges of the Golden Age of Hollywood, centenarian actor Kirk Douglas has been involved with many iconic pictures in the past 100 years, but it was the four-time Oscar winner Spartacus, which starred Douglas as the titular slave who takes on the Roman Empire, that changed the industry when it was released in 1960. Not only did it help launch the career of renowned director Stanley Kubrick, the film effectively broke the Hollywood blacklist when Douglas signed Dalton Trumbo to write the screenplay. Celebrate one of the greats when Spartacus screens as part of a 100th birthday retrospective at the Brattle Theatre on Dec. 29. / Meghan Kavanaugh

Allied ★★★ It begins in Casablanca and ends on a runway, but director Robert Zemeckis hasn't quite matched Michael Curtiz's wartime classic starring Humphrey Bogart and Ingrid Bergman. It's not for a lack of trying. In Brad Pitt and Marion Cotillard, Zemeckis has cast two of the hottest stars onscreen, though they don't quite smolder. But how could they? Despite a game script by Steven Knight (writer of 2007's Eastern Promises), Zemeckis has typically been a cold filmmaker. Which isn't to say that he hasn't made some hugely enjoyable pictures (Back to the Future or Forrest Gump, anyone?), but he's always been better at employing the latest technology than presenting real human emotion—and with this espionage picture that opens in 1942, he's using every trick in his digital toy box, including an ill-advised decision to de-age Pitt. He plays Max Vatan, a Canadian intelligence officer who falls for Marianne Beauséjour (Cotillard), the French Resistance fighter who poses as his wife in North Africa. Skipping ahead a couple of years, the two have married for real and started a family in London. Alas, Mom might also be a Nazi spy. If only we could better feel the tensions this might create at the dinner table. (At Boston Common, Fenway, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Arrival ★★1/2 When I first heard the strong word-of-mouth buzz about this science-fiction film from Denis Villeneuve (director of Prisoners, Sicario and the forthcoming Blade Runner sequel), I should have paid heed to the name of the picture's screenwriter: Eric Heisserer, the scribe behind Final Destination 5 and the misbegotten reboots of A Nightmare on Elm Street and The Thing. Though Heisserer is working with someone else's tale (Ted Chiang's Nebula Award-winning short story "Story of Your Life"), the thought-provoking ideas in his script begin to collapse the more you think about them. Nevertheless, while the spell lasts, Villeneuve (aided immeasurably by his longtime collaborator, composer Jóhann Jóhannsson) presents a compelling drama as linguistics expert Louise Banks (Amy Adams) and theoretical physicist Ian Donnelly (Jeremy Renner) race to communicate with the mysterious alien lifeforms aboard massive UFOs that suddenly appear around the planet. Also hindered by visuals that are too ambitious for its modest budget, the film is a noble, flawed effort. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Fantastic Beasts and Where to Find Them ★★1/2 Director David Yates, who helmed the final four Harry Potter adaptations, returns to the "Wizarding World" of author J.K. Rowling for this spinoff. And once you hear the first few notes borrowed from composer John Williams' Potter theme play under the title card, there's no denying we're back in familiar territory—even if this new tale is set during an earlier era, on the opposite side of the Atlantic and starring a British hero only hinted at in an earlier picture. It's 1926 in New York, and Newt Scamander (Oscar winner Eddie Redmayne) is fresh off a boat, carrying a rather special portmanteau that doubles as a portal to the makeshift zoo he maintains for his menagerie of fantastic beasts. Naturally, some get loose, unleashing enough visual effects overkill to fill four sequels. Conveniently enough, a quartet of follow-ups have already been announced, all of which will be scripted by Rowling, who makes a shaky screenwriting debut in this film. Now that her world-building is done, let's hope she allows her characters—including wand-wielding sisters Porpentina (Katherine Waterston) and Queenie Goldstein (Alison Sudol) and Jacob Kowalski (Dan Fogler), the No-Maj (American for Muggle) who gets swept up in the adventure—more room to create beautiful magic together. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Fences ★★★1/2 In his third time sitting in the director's chair (after 2002's Antwone Fisher and 2007's The Great Debaters), Denzel Washington reprises his starring role from the 2010 Broadway revival of August Wilson's Pulitzer-winning play. Playing the aging, forever procrastinating ballplayer turned trash collector Troy, he's joined by most of the other actors from that Tony-winning revival, and the acting is impeccable. Even though Washington's workmanlike direction rarely allows you to forget that you're watching a film that began as a stage drama, Viola Davis' stunning turn as Troy's long-suffering wife, Rose—captured in numerous unflattering, snot-filled close-ups—will tear you to pieces, as will Mykelti Williamson's smaller role as Troy's younger brother, Gabriel, who returned from World War II with a metal plate in his head and the mental capacity of a child. Troy may be proud, but he isn't above taking advantage of Gabriel's veteran's benefits, or cruelly sabotaging the promising football career of his teenaged son, Cory (newcomer Jovan Adepo), and denying financial aid to Lyons (Russell Hornsby), Cory's floundering half-brother. Even Troy's oldest friend, fellow garbageman Bono (Stephen Henderson), seems to be growing tired of his pal's antics. Nevertheless, those in Troy's life still gravitate toward this compelling, complex man, one of the great, flawed figures from Wilson's celebrated "Pittsburgh Cycle." (At Assembly Row, Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Jackie ★★★★ Few films will disorient you as much as Pablo Larraín's biopic of Jacqueline Bouvier Kennedy, and a lot of the credit belongs to the exceptional score by Mica Levi, the talented avant-garde composer who lent an equal sense of unease to Jonathan Glazer's Under the Skin three years ago. Her music is just as much of a character as the first lady herself, who's portrayed in this remarkable film from Chile's Larraín (director of another current biopic, Neruda) by Academy Award winner Natalie Portman in a stunning turn that would be easy to dismiss as a simple, mannered caricature—if the real Jackie O hadn't been so studied and practiced herself. After all, wasn't she also playing a very public role as the president's wife? Which isn't to say that she didn't love her husband Jack, who's played in brief flashbacks by Caspar Phillipson, a Dane with an uncanny resemblance to JFK. Not nearly as strong a visual match but nevertheless perfect for his role is Peter Sarsgaard as Jack's brother Bobby, who becomes Jackie's fiercest protector in the week after the president's brutal assassination. And cinematographer Stéphane Fontaine's grainy 16 mm footage brilliantly evokes those cold November days in 1963. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

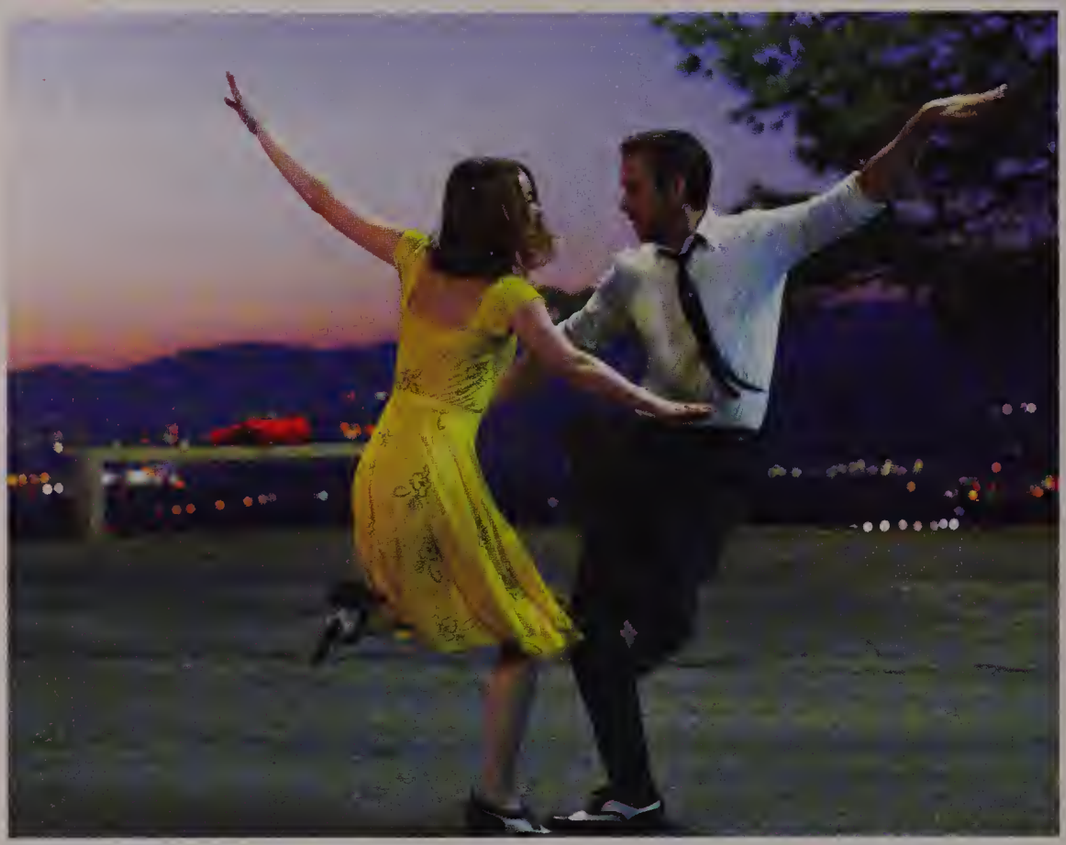
La La Land ★★★★ Providence-born, Harvard-educated writer/director Damien Chazelle, a 31-year-old who broke through two years ago with Whiplash, another picture built on a backbone of jazz-inflected beats, immediately announces what you'll be in for with a bravura song and dance sequence that sets the tone for the two hours to come. While Whiplash turned on the intense battle of wills between Miles Teller's drum student and J.K. Simmons' drill sergeant-like instructor, here Chazelle has crafted something closer in spirit to his little-seen 2009 debut, Guy and Madeline on a Park Bench, a black-and-white, Boston- and New York-set romantic charmer that fused Hollywood musical traditions with a verite style. Not content to simply repeat himself, Chazelle immediately and slyly announces his grander ambitions for La La Land, which pairs a singing and dancing Ryan Gosling and Emma Stone in a wildly colorful, ultra-widescreen, toe-tapping throwback to musicals past. To casual viewers, it might appear that Chazelle shares their appreciation for the MGM musicals of the '40s and '50s, but those with a more expansive cinematic palate may recognize that his heart beats with a passion for the '60s confections of French director Jacques Demy and composer Michel Legrand. Which isn't to say that he leaves the magic of Hollywood behind altogether. But even if you're not a fan of movie musicals, his ode to "the ones who dream" will quite possibly make a convert out of you. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Manchester by the Sea ★★★★ Set and shot in the Cape Ann region of northern Massachusetts, writer/director Kenneth Lonergan's third consecutive masterpiece is the incredibly sad story of a loner whose life has been decimated by a single late-night moment of bad judgment. So I was surprised by how much a movie so unflinching in its observations about death and its effect on the living could make me laugh. A good deal of the humor comes from the lived-in, naturalistic interactions between Lee Chandler (Casey Affleck) and his 16-year-old nephew, Patrick (Lucas Hedges, impressing after small roles in Wes Anderson's Moonrise Kingdom and The Grand Budapest Hotel). After the death of his older brother Joe (Kyle Chandler), Lee learns that he's been made the sole guardian of Patrick, forcing the Quincy-based janitor to reluctantly return to Manchester-by-the-Sea, where he'll also revisit the devastating event that tore apart his marriage to Randi (Michelle Williams, who will shatter you in her small but integral role). Lonergan is extraordinarily attuned to the way people talk, mining both pathos and humor from his peerless dialogue. But Manchester by the Sea, one of the richest dramas of this year or any other, is also about what the characters can't say to one another—and how the silences separate them. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Miss Sloane ★★ This latest drama from Shakespeare in Love director John Madden is clearly being released into theaters with an eye toward the Oscars. It's topical, taking on the Second Amendment, the gun lobby and the D.C. swamp-dwellers who stand to profit from an emotionally charged topic. It also stars Jessica Chastain in an award-ready role as the smart, tough-as-nails and deeply principled career woman Elizabeth Sloane. Her high-powered lobbyist isn't too far removed from her role in Kathryn Bigelow's Zero Dark Thirty as the CIA analyst who'd stop at nothing until she found Osama bin Laden. Ah, but that 2012 drama had something Miss Sloane doesn't: Mark Boal's crackling script, which kept the fictionalized tale charged without resorting to the ridiculous theatrics and late-film twist that Jonathan Perera employs here. The first-time screenwriter has obviously studied the work of Aaron Sorkin, borrowing much of the speechmaking and theatrics that are hallmarks of the Oscar winner's work on films like The Social Network, but Perera mistakes quantity for quality; you can practically see each actor (including Sam Waterston and Alison Pill, two cast members from Sorkin's The Newsroom) teeing up to have their self-righteous, same-sounding say. Some viewers are bound to mistake the film's topicality for profundity, but don't be fooled. For a movie reliant on the hot-button topic of guns, it wildly overshoots. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)



Moana ★★★1/2 With Pixar boss John Lasseter now overseeing production for the classic Disney Animation label, some may mourn the death of the hand-drawn animation seen in the likes of The Little Mermaid and Aladdin as traditional animation directors make the switch from ink and paint to CG. Nevertheless, the filmmaking team behind those classics, Ron Clements and John Musker, are off to a sterling start with this action-packed fable, which is co-directed by Don Hall and Chris Williams, the duo behind Big Hero 6. This tale of an adventurous teenager hits huge emotional highs, backed by toe-tapping songs from Lin-Manuel Miranda (the musical genius behind Broadway's Hamilton), Grammy-winning composer Mark Mancina and Opetaia Foa'i, lead singer of world music band Te Vaka. It has Moana (voiced by 16-year-old newcomer Auli'i Cravalho) sailing off on a heroic mission to save her people with some help from once-mighty demigod Maui (Dwayne Johnson). While the story may be familiar, in a refreshing break from the norm, Disney's newest princess sets sail without the prospect of a prince awaiting her on the horizon. Ah, progress. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

A Monster Calls ★★1/2 A very busy fantasy/drama hybrid that never quite hits the emotional high it's desperately striving to reach, this latest from Juan Antonio Bayona (director of 2007's The Orphanage and 2012's The Impossible) finds him visualizing the award-winning children's novel by Patrick Ness, who adapted his own book into the picture's wooden screenplay. Liam Neeson voices "The Monster," a towering, imaginary tree creature who pays nocturnal visits to 12-year-old Conor (Lewis MacDougall), a bullied, friendless lad who's retreating into his own head as his mother (Rogue One's Felicity Jones) fights a losing battle against cancer—as did Siobhan Dowd, the author who succumbed to the disease before she could write the book. (Ness fleshed out Dowd's original story idea, for better or worse.) Sigourney Weaver appears as the boy's severely ill-fitting grandmother, distracting with a dodgy British accent as she extends an olive branch to her dying daughter's son. Effectively Conor's only friend aside from his "mum," the Monster is a storyteller, and in the end, his message—delivered through three tales presented in highly stylized, computer-animated vignettes supervised by Adrián García—amounts to this: It's OK to grieve. If only there were more feeling behind his message; this tree is all bark, with little emotional bite. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Moonlight ★★★★ Writer/director Barry Jenkins' sophomore film is a powerfully acted drama spread across three distinct acts, all focused on the same character, seen first as a child (Alex R. Hibbert), then as a teen (Ashton Sanders) and at last as an adult (Trevante Rhodes). Each chapter would stand as a strong short film if viewed independently, but the cumulative effect might just blindside you. Jenkins introduces us to Little (Hibbert) when he's a poor black youth living in a Miami housing project. Gradually, a local drug dealer named Juan (Mahershala Ali) and his girlfriend Teresa (R&B singer Janelle Monáe) become surrogate parents to Little. This doesn't sit well with Paula (Naomie Harris), Little's single mother, an addict who's hooked on the junk that Juan peddles. Sadly, she can't help taking out the resentment she feels toward Juan and Teresa on her quiet, "different" child. Exactly how different, we discover when Little breaks his usual silence to ask Juan, "What's a faggot?" Calmly and without judgment, Juan explains, "It's a word people use to make gay people feel bad." The boy then inquires, "Am I a faggot?" Juan warmly replies, "You might be gay, but you're not a faggot.... You gotta decide for yourself who you wanna be." By the final third, as our no-longer-little hero drives toward an oceanside date with fate, he not only embraces who he is, but the boy finally becomes a man. Bring tissues. (At Coolidge Corner, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Patriots Day ★ As if the circumstances surrounding the Boston Marathon bombing weren't horrible enough, along comes Dorchester-born Mark Wahlberg to exploit the tragedy that's still a fresh wound for so many. Listed among the film's 14 producers, Wahlberg has cast himself as the true story's fictional hero, Boston Police Sgt. Tommy Saunders, who is present for every big moment in the case, from witnessing the blasts at the finish line straight on through discovering Dzhokhar Tsarnaev (My Big Fat Greek Wedding 2's Alex Wolff) hiding inside a boat in Watertown. He also becomes a springboard for Richard DesLauriers (Kevin Bacon), offering homespun advice to the FBI special agent running the investigation of the bombing. Hell, Big Papi himself (David Ortiz in a cameo) even stops to shake Wahlberg's hand at Fenway Park just before the slugger delivers his iconic "This is our fucking city" speech. It is our fucking city, and we deserve a hell of a lot better than this tasteless cash-in on a tragedy. When director Peter Berg's last picture—Deepwater Horizon, another film based on explosive real-life events—opened in September, I mused that perhaps he might treat this film's subject with the respect that it deserves. Instead, I now have enough distance from my earlier review to realize I should have called Wahlberg out on making himself the hero of the BP oil disaster, too. Disgusting. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Sing ★★1/2 The appeal of Illumination Entertainment's animated films somewhat eludes me. Sure, the minions were a hoot as sidekicks in the Despicable Me pictures, but their starring-role spinoff felt curiously thrown together. Ditto The Secret Life of Pets, which didn't explore what your pets might really be up to when you leave home so much as it aped the plot of the original Toy Story, a film more than two decades old. Curiously, Illumination's technology and unappealing character designs feel like they're at least a decade behind Pixar's efforts. Here, I was left wondering why, exactly, we were once again watching a collection of anthropomorphized animals (a theater-owning koala voiced by Matthew McConaughey, a homemaking pig voiced by Reese Witherspoon, a hard-rocking porcupine voiced by Scarlett Johansson, etc.) prance about the screen. Disney's smart, superb Zootopia directly addressed this question as it slyly used the differences between species to examine issues of race, sexism and class within human society. Alas, if you're looking for any underlying meaning when your kids drag you to see this formulaic entertainment featuring a pop music competition plotline, the script from writer/director Garth Jennings (Son of Rambow) won't provide you with any. But hey—a singing gorilla! (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

STILL REIGNING Don't expect a phoned-in run-through of their massive radio hits when Kings of Leon hit the Garden for a headlining show. Sure, they've got those in spades, but the scrappy Nashville family act made their rise from lo-fi Southern party rockers to pop-chart-topping mega-stars steadily, making a slow, thoughtful transition from the loose-limbed, jangly garage rock of 2003's Youth and Young Manhood to the streamlined, radio-friendly fare of October's WALLS, the quartet's seventh studio album. And while years, experience and major label dollars have polished the Kings' rougher edges, they've retained ties to their rugged roots, with frontman Caleb Followill's howling vocals tempering a more mainstream production. Find our why they've reigned so long when they play the TD Garden on Jan. 13. / Alexandra Cavallo

Edited by Sarah Hagman

FRENCH PRESS In the days after the January 2015 Charlie Hebdo attack, senior preceptor of Harvard's Romance Languages and Literatures department Nicole Mills found herself in Paris, scooping up newspapers and magazines and photographing banners and graffiti to document reactions to the global debate on freedom of speech, religion and beyond. That was the beginning of an initiative by librarians and scholars to preserve the moment's blog posts, tweets and other fleeting materials; the collaborators have since gathered thousands of items, and they're still accepting contributions. Catch Mills and co-founders Lidia Uziel and Virginie Greene when they give a talk at the Jan. 5 opening reception for the Charlie Archive Exhibition, which showcases caricatures, paintings and poetry they've collected at the French Cultural Center through the end of the month. / Sarah Hagman

BOOKS & POETRY

IN COLD BLOOD

Prolific author and adventurer Lawrence Millman is used to exploring remote locales. During the course of his career, the Cambridge resident has spent time hiking through Siberia, marooned on an Arctic island and foraging for mushrooms around the world. His latest book, At the End of the World, transports readers to a far corner of the Arctic, where a series of murders committed in the name of religion rocked an Inuit community. The episode occurred in 1941, but Millman uses his true-crime tale to draw parallels to today's digital addictions and destruction of the natural world. Bundle up when he heads to Porter Square Books for a discussion on Jan. 17. / Meghan Kavanaugh

GO FLY A KITE

Fashion + Philanthropy = Sunday Funday at the Four Seasons, which hosted a runway presentation by Veronica Beard to raise money for Flying Kites, an organization that helps children in Kenya.

Front and center were hosts Ashley Bernon, Leila Chambers, Rebecca Griffing, Jenny Johnson, Victoria Knox, Cheryl Richards and Meredith Starr, while the everyone-who's-anyone guest list included the likes of brunette beauty Tiffany Ortiz, Wellesley yummy mummies Penny Fireman and Kat VanDernoot, broadcasting babes Lisa Hughes and Erika Tarantal, travel titan Andy Levine, hair whisperer Pini Swissa, the stunning blonde Shannon Pastuszak, beautiful do-gooder Julie Joyal, Back Bay chatelaine Christy Cashman, corkscrew-curled cutie Melissa Steffy, interior design avatar Erin Gates and countless equally fabulous others.

It being a Sunday afternoon, everyone opted for Champagne, and it being a fashion show, everyone was dressed to the nines. A tear-jerking presentation was followed by a laugh-provoking talkback with the design duo, Veronica Miele Beard and Veronica Swanson Beard, which was followed by a fashion show, which was followed by drinks in the Bristol Bar and a not-so-pretty Monday morning. The moral of the story: Fashion + Philanthropy also = Hangover.

CHEW ON THIS

One of the most consistently eye-opening evenings in Boston is Boston Medical Center's Food for Thought gala, held at the Mandarin Oriental to raise money for the hospital's grow clinic, food pantry and pediatric partner programs.

Shmying around the cocktail reception were such sterling characters as board chair Martha Samuelson, the Karger twins, Paul and Wes, with their respective other halves, Melissa Lena and Ashley, party planner extraordinaire Linda Matzkin and her mensch of a husband, Joe, benevolent plutocrats Arthur Winn and Teddy Cutler, the latter's gorgeous daughter-in-law, Randi, with husband Joel, freedom fighter Bonnie Berger and her silver fox, Merle, broadcasting goddesses Heather Unruh and Karen Holmes Ward, power couple Deb Goldberg and Michael Winter, investment badass Saul Pannell, the toothsome twosome of Mark Andrus and Alissa Napoleone, the two-person sitcom of Marjorie Clapprood and Chris Spinazzola, free spirit Willa Bodman and her main squeeze, Taylor, Chestnut Hillions Rachael Goldfarb and Mark Slovenkai, the delightful Molly Schoeck and her guy, Guy MacDonald, the comme il faut Mary Wolfson, latter-day Mother Teresa Deborah Frank and one guest who said, "None of my clothes fit. I need to either lose weight or switch to sweatpants."

The gorgeous centerpieces at dinner were made from produce destined for the food pantry. And there wasn't a dry eye in the house after the speeches, which included the announcement that the Grow Clinic will be carbon-neutral within two years. The evening's funniest exchange: "I run into him all the time."

"Not too hard, I hope. He's a pretty big guy." ◆
